Not content with airport plans, Boris wants to run our railways

Chris Murphy

editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

PLANS by London mayor Boris Johnson to take over some of Kent's train routes could result in higher fares and slower services.

That's the fear of Sevenoaks MP Michael Fallon, who this week met Transport for London (TfL) officials to discuss the proposals.

Mr Johnson believes he could provide faster and cheaper services on the Dartford and Sevenoaks routes to the capital that will better connect with the London underground system and Docklands Light Railway.

But Mr Fallon says he is concerned that if the proposals are agreed, fares could go up dramatically as it is the London mayor who sets the prices – and people in those parts of Kent who will have to pay any increases have no way of voting for or against the mayor in elections, something the MP feels is simply unfair.

Mr Fallon also wants assurances that non-stop commuter services on the lines will not be touched.

He said: "My concerns are commuters ending up with a slower service, but above all this could mean the mayor may set higher fares, and out in Sevenoaks we cannot vote for this mayor."

Following the private meeting with TfL's deputy chairman Daniel Moylan, the MP said he was told the non-stop services were safe – at least for now.

However, on the subject of fares, while the mayor can set the level, he can be overruled by the Secretary of State – and she is next on Mr Fallon's list for a meeting.

He said: "They have reassured me services will not be slower. However,

COMPENSATION

NHS to pay millions for serious failings that left baby severely disabled at birth

By Chris Murphy

editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

A BOY left severely disabled by medical errors at Maidstone Hospital has won millions in the High Court.

William Scotton, aged four, was left blind, epileptic and suffering severe cerebral palsy and will never be able to walk or talk following major blunders during his mother's pregnancy with him and his birth.

A judge found that, despite a series of scans showing William's unusually large size of 8lb at 34 weeks, not enough was done to avoid the tragedy.

Tracy Scotton, from Bearsted, was admitted to Maidstone Hospital in August, 2007, when her labour started at 42 weeks.

Augustus Ullstein QC told the High Court in London that had midwives referred Mrs Scotton to a consultant after her 34-week scan, further scanning would have led to a planned caesarean.

According to the QC, had this happened, William would have been born completely healthy.

Further blunders saw the baby left unmonitored, starved of oxygen and his heartbeat lost on a monitor.

Mr Ullstein said it was all avoidable and a "sorry saga of careless mistake upon mistake".

BLUNDERS:

A judge found that mistakes by staff at Maidstone Hospital accounted for the disabilities that William Scotton, now aged four, will have to suffer for the rest of his life

Mr Justice Tugendhat ordered the NHS to pay between £8.1 million and £9.6 million, and perhaps more if William lives beyond his predicted much-reduced life expectancy.

William's home will have hydrotherapy facilities and a 24-hour care regime.

Mrs Scotton said it had been "hell". "When I asked about an elective caesarean because of William's size even when I was 34 weeks pregnant, I was told not to be silly and that the trust didn't do them," she said.

"That's when this all went wrong. I now know I should have been referred on to a consultant. That, the hospital have now admitted, would have led to me having a caesarean and William would now be a normal, happy and healthy four-year-old."

She added: "On the day I went into labour and was admitted to Maidstone Hospital I was put on constant monitoring. This meant that a midwife or a doctor had to be with me all of the time.

"The doctor was junior and inexperienced and the consultant was not in the hospital, but only on call, which meant she was at the end of the telephone and completely reliant on what she was told as to my condition by the junior doctor.

"There had been no progress in my labour for some hours and the midwife was growing concerned.

"The doctor dismissed these concerns, ignored a number of what the hospital inquiry called 'red flags' and ignored the suggestions of a very experienced midwife that something should be done.

"The doctor's plan was to do nothing and because she told the consultant over the telephone that there were no problems, the consultant agreed."

Her son's lawyer, Mike Williams, of McMillan Williams, Sevenoaks, said the hospital's internal enquiry acknowledged serious failings and accepted a number of 'red flags' had been missed.

A spokesman for Maidstone Hospital said: "We wish to repeat sincere apologies to William and his family for the injuries he suffered arising out of his delivery in 2007.

"The trust is pleased an appropriate level of compensation has been agreed between the parties to offer security for William.

"The trust wishes to pay tribute to the dedicated care given to William by his family over the past four-and-a-half years and wishes William and his family well for the future."

Plan would see routes to London come under mayor's remit

they did not reassure me about fares. A future mayor, not Boris, but a future mayor, could ramp up fares and use that money to subsidise those inside London.

"We wouldn't have any control over that because we don't vote for the London mayor.

"TfL said they would have to go away and think of some protocol to be written into any new franchise that would protect areas outside London, like Sevenoaks and Dartford, from increases above what the rest of London would pay.

"Having the Secretary of State for Transport being able to overrule the mayor is not a safeguard.

"You could have a high-spending Labour mayor and a high-spending Labour Secretary of State that might decide these are affluent people and they ought to pay more to help people in Hackney or Stoke Newington or wherever.

"There is no safeguard there, making this an issue, and they need to address it."

Under the London mayor's plans, responsibility for stations and services in several areas, including Southeastern's routes between London and the Kent towns, would come under the remit of his office and Transport for London.

Mr Johnson has already upset many in Kent with his desire to see another London airport built in the county, but now he wants control over some trains, too.

He said: "We think that with greater cooperation and integration we could deliver better services for the passengers, safer stations and less fare-dodging."

And he added in his report called the Mayor's Rail Vision: "The lack of a coherent vision is a barrier to investment."

TOWN CENTRES

Fears parking price hikes could be the final straw for our high streets

By Marijke Cox

marijke.cox@archant.co.uk

RISING parking charges across almost all of the county's districts could put the final nail in the coffin for the high street as we know it, warn business experts.

Of Kent's 13 councils, only three have said they will not increase fees, while the remaining 10 have either already put up charges, are due to implement rises, or are reviewing fees.

In Shepway, a major campaign has been launched in a bid to stop the council introducing on-street parking charges where it is currently free to park, claiming that it would drive shop-owners away.

From April, parking fees will go up by as much as 20p in parts of Canterbury; by the same amount in some Sevenoaks car parks; and in Dover, Deal and Sandwich drivers will see the amount of time they can park for their money cut in some car parks, and long-stay fees increased by 50p. Gravesham has already implemented increases with the previous £1 flat fee for four hours in the town pushed up to £2.

In Tonbridge and Malling, town centre parking charges remain unchanged, but residents and business permits will go up – as in most of the other districts.

Nearby Tunbridge Wells will discuss parking charges at a meeting next week, with the authority expected to increase fees by 10p or 20p.

Medway has also agreed to push up fees in some areas. Only Dartford, Swale and Ashford have made no increases. Thanet council is due to carry out a review.

Business experts have warned the widespread

PAYING UP: It will soon cost you more to park increases could spell the end of the under-pressure high street.

During a visit to Margate – which has the second highest number of empty shops in the country – retail guru Mary Portas stressed that the cost of town centre parking was a major issue.

Kent and Medway chairman of the Federation of Small Businesses Roger House said while he could not criticise councils for increasing charges during times of economic hardship, he admitted it could be the final nail in the coffin for the traditional high street.

"I know local authorities haven't got as much money and therefore I can't criticise them for making these decisions, but if we are trying to build our local economy and support our high streets we have to make it attractive to get people there," he said.

"If you add the cost of parking to other costs drivers have, the high street is not so attractive and people will go to out of town places to shop, where it is likely they can park for free. This means big corporate chains are supported rather than independent micro-businesses, which are edged out."

Mr House, admitted, however, that it may be time to look past the traditional high street.

"Is the day of the high street over? I think perhaps we should be looking towards providing space for micro-businesses as part of agreements when big firms like Tesco or Asda are developed," he said. "High streets should also be used for multi-occupancy – for shops and residential."

"We've got to start thinking differently."

Shepway District Council, which has come under fire from residents and businesses for its proposed parking strategy, defended the plans.

The strategy includes introducing charges where it is currently free to park.

Leader Cllr Robert Bliss said: "One of the objectives is to support local businesses by encouraging a greater turnover of vehicles in convenient high street parking spaces. We want to make it easier to find parking for that quick trip to the shops."

But Kent spokesman for the Association of British Drivers Ian Taylor said motorists were being hit yet again.

"Drivers don't have bottomless pockets and yet they are being expected to find more money," he said. "According to a Department for Transport Act from 1984, councils are not allowed to raise parking charges to raise money."

The 52-year-old's body was discovered at his farm in East Sussex in October, 2010. He had been crushed by two vehicles.

Six men from Ashford and Tunbridge Wells are charged with manslaughter, conspiracy to burgle and conspiracy to pervert the course of justice. The trial is expected to last eight weeks.

The team has also had hundreds of successful convictions for child abuse since its launch.

➔ Tribute for tragic Hugo

A SPECIAL service is being held to celebrate the life of a teenager who drowned in a Canterbury pond.

Hugo Wenn, 17, was found dead in Reed Pond last month. Later the same day, the body of 25-year-old Daniel Lloyd was found.

A service is being held to celebrate the life of Hugo at St John's The Baptist Church in Barham, where he lived, from 3.15pm on Thursday, February 23.

Kent Police is continuing its investigation into the circumstances surrounding the deaths.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Fresh call for inquiry into failure of KCC vulnerable children's services

COUNTY Hall's Lib Dem leader has made fresh calls for an inquiry into the 2010 children's services crisis, warning the system that allowed the "cover up" still exists.

Cllr Trudy Dean said social worker vacancy rates were at a high level of risk as far back as 2008, and in 2009 were worse than those at Haringey council, where Baby P was under care.

But she said it was not until an unannounced Ofsted inspection at Kent County Council in 2010 the extent of the problem was uncovered.

The findings revealed children had been left at risk of significant harm by inadequate services, with 2,600 identified as being without an allocated social worker.

A recent Ofsted report, however, found significant improvements had been made since the damning inspection more than a year ago.

But Cllr Dean said there still needed to be an inquiry looking at why early problems were not flagged up at the time. She said throughout 2009, more than half of the county's social work teams had vacancy rates of more than 25 per cent – worse than Haringey where Baby P died in 2007.

"In Ashford, Swale, Dartford, Maidstone, Sevenoaks, Tonbridge and Malling, and Tunbridge Wells rates were more than 25 per cent throughout the majority of the year," she said.

"In Thanet, rates were more than 25 per cent throughout the entire year. In Dartford, vacancy rates were exceeding 40 per cent over four consecutive months. I cannot believe members given these figures would have failed to take the necessary action to fill these vacancies – as we did when Ofsted blew the lid off this two years later.

"This information was all available in KCC, but was never shared with councillors. I also understand it was never shared with the senior departmental management teams. Why was KCC told in April, 2010, that children's social services was 'coping' and that there were no concerns about professional standards, when only four months later Ofsted disagreed?"

She claimed the system that allowed it to happen still existed. She said: "I want a clause in all officers' contracts to oblige them to reveal information which councillors need to do their job properly. If we do this we will ensure these failures do not occur again."

Leader of KCC Paul Carter said there was no need for an inquiry due to the dramatic improvements made in the delivery of services for vulnerable families, children and young people.

"We are all accept there was a management failure in children's services."

"Kent has now improved the pay, terms and conditions for frontline social workers and vacancy rates are now at acceptable levels. However, the drive to recruit the very best social workers into Kent will continue with vigour."

"Mrs Dean should look forwards not back."

Ministers say county won't get a penny of foreign lorry tax cash

By Marijke Cox

marijke.cox@archant.co.uk

HIGHWAYS chiefs are putting increasing pressure on government to secure cash from the proposed foreign lorry tax after ministers admitted Kent would not get a single penny.

Around 87 per cent of all international road haulage that comes to the UK arrives via Dover, travelling on the M20 or M2, but despite the county shouldering this burden the Government said none of the money generated under the plans would go to Kent County Council.

Tory councillors have vowed to push on to ensure the county receives some of the funds, warning that future development at Dover and Calais ports would increase the number of foreign lorries and cause further problems and expense to Kent's taxpayers.

KCC has long campaigned for help funding a solution to the chaos caused by Operation Stack – when lorries are parked on the M20 during disruption at cross-Channel ports – as well as help paying for damage to the M20, M2 and other main roads used by hauliers.

Hope was raised last month when ministers announced they were looking at charging foreign lorry drivers to use UK roads. But KCC highways member Cllr Bryan Sweetland said none of the money generated would go to Kent.

UNDER PRESSURE: Most foreign trucks enter Britain through our ports and use Kent's roads

KCC chiefs are now stepping up pressure to ensure funds are directed to the county.

Cllr Sweetland said: "As we made clear in our Growth without Gridlock transport strategy, we will seek a proportion of the revenue generated from this proposal to fund improvements and ensure greater resilience in Kent's road infrastructure."

"The Government forecast that from 2015-16, the scheme will generate net revenue of around £23 million.

"I have heard the roads minister recently assert none of this money will be going to KCC.

"But the fact remains that 87 per cent of all international road haulage in the UK comes via the Dover Strait and with the planned port development at both Dover and Calais, this figure will increase further.

"Foreign lorries do not contribute a penny to Treasury coffers, leaving the taxpayer – especially those in Kent – to foot the bill for the costs they cause.

"To compound the situation, foreign trucks fill up with diesel bought outside the UK, where fuel duty is far lower, so not only do they avoid contributing to the UK economy at the pumps, they also put UK hauliers at a massive commercial disadvantage."

KCC highways chiefs are now also looking to lobby ministers for the possible development of a fuel station in the duty free zone at Dover port, offering European levels of duty so as to stop foreign lorry drivers filling up abroad.

They will be meeting with roads minister Mike Penning in three weeks' time to call for a share of revenue to lessen the impacts that foreign lorries have on the county's roads.

KCC leader Cllr Paul Carter said the authority had spent 20 years asking for a foreign lorry charging system.

"But if we can't get a cast-iron guarantee that money will be given back to the councils that pay to fix the damage caused by foreign trucks, then it achieves nothing," he said.

Racial abuse of woman

A 32-year-old woman and her young son were racially abused by a man on a mobility scooter at the corner of Cheriton Road and Shorncliffe Road, Folkestone.

A woman was returning from a dentist appointment when she met a man on a mobility scooter as she walked round a corner.

She apologised and moved out of his way but it is alleged that he got off the scooter and came up very close to her, shouting racial abuse.

CRIME

Police authority ready for challenge of hand over to new commissioner

IN JUST nine months Kent will see one of the biggest changes in almost half a century to the way the police force is overseen.

One person will take over the role of the Kent Police Authority and be given responsibility for hiring and firing Kent Police's chief constable, setting the force's budget, and monitoring the performance of officers.

And, despite the huge task ahead for the individual, there is no obligatory experience needed for whoever takes on the new role of Police and Crime Commissioner (PCC). With the countdown started and a number of contenders having already thrown their hats into the ring for the position, Kent Police Authority is preparing for what could be a challenging handover.

From November 22 – just a week after the PCC is elected – the police authority, which has 16 members overseeing the force, will cease to exist.

But chief executive of Kent Police Authority Graham Hooper said he was confident there would be a smooth transition.

"We can't be complacent; this is a big change. There are bound to be some challenges that come up and we will find out how to deal with issues when they arise," he said.

"I'm reasonably confident we've got a good plan. We'll be using a blend of material for the transition work: national guidance, good practice from other sectors, such as the directly elected mayoral model used in Lewisham, alongside in-house expertise."

In the run up to the elections, the police authority will be running briefing sessions with candidates to offer information about Kent Police.

"They can take that away and make their own decisions about how to use the material we have provided," said Mr Hooper. "In that week leading up to he or she taking office we can sit down with them and brief them and assist them in understanding the role they are about to take on."

Mr Hooper said his job will be to ensure the PCC is properly supported.

He added: "The PCC will want to be seen to be raising standards and so I'm sure they will be in listening mode."

The new PCC role has come under fire from the chairman of the Kent Police Federation, Ian Pointon.

When the new system was unveiled by the Government, he warned it was leading to "dangerous new ground around the politicisation of the police".

"They will have the power to hire and fire chief constables, which will present unwelcome pressure leading up to elections," he said. "I can't see what's fundamentally wrong with the current system. Is it perfect? Absolutely not, but I don't think it's broken."

Army veteran Col Tim Collins, famed for his inspirational Iraq War speech, is hoping to be the Tory candidate for PCC.

SUPERMARKETS

Traffic fears as village welcomes plans for two new supermarkets

By Chris Murphy

editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

RESIDENTS and businesses in Staplehurst are worried two major supermarkets could be opening in the village – and their biggest concern is traffic.

Tesco has submitted plans for a store and improved railway station facilities.

It wants to build the store on Station Approach and improve facilities at Staplehurst railway station.

The store will create 150 new full and part-time job opportunities for people living in the area, while the station developments will provide improved transport facilities, including a new secure car park.

To the south, Sainsbury's wants to build another supermarket, and that has already had a preliminary thumbs up from the parish council.

But some local companies are concerned it is all going to lead to more traffic, with a major impact on life in the large village.

Julian Flint runs a computer management company. He said: "I live at FUTURE: A representation of the future stores. Sainsbury's above, and Tesco, right

Cross at Hand and am fed up with lorries shaking my house.

"Now if these two supermarkets, Tesco and Sainsbury's, get the go-ahead we will be seeing many more lorries running past not just my house, but many others.

"These supermarkets are a bit like buses – we have none and then two come along at once. I am sure from a green standpoint it will be good news because it will cut down on the number of car journeys to the supermarkets in Aylesford and Maidstone. But conversely, now we are going to get all the traffic on our doorstep."

And Babs Hubbard, who runs JBH

Refurbishments, added: "Traffic is my main worry. I have spoken with lots of people around here and we are broadly for it, but worried all the extra cars arriving will have an impact.

"Plus, there will be a lot of delivery lorries coming and going every day."

Tesco said residents have told it they want the jobs, convenience and choice a new supermarket would bring.

Sainsbury's wants to move a local company, DK Holdings, build it a new factory nearby, and then open a 19,000 sq ft supermarket between Station Approach and Lodge Road.

A spokesman for the parish council agreed the two sites are quite close, and it's almost as if the two companies are competing for the same turf.

Jonathan Simpson, Tesco's corporate affairs manager, said: "After consulting with the community we are pleased to have submitted an application for a new store and improved station facilities in Staplehurst.

"We've been encouraged by the level of support received from residents who are in favour of more jobs and investment in the area.

"By providing a new supermarket and convenient petrol filling station on one site we can help to keep people shopping within the village. We are excited about the prospect of investing in Staplehurst and working with the council on our plans."

And Max Whitehand, Sainsbury's regional development executive, said: "We are excited about our partnership with DK Holdings on this project. The new store and factory, together with our proposals for a petrol filling station, would bring a range of benefits to the community as well as enhancing the future of an important local employer."

Jo James, chief executive, Kent In-victa Chamber of Commerce, said:

"Supermarkets are always a contentious issue. There is always the element of them taking business from local stores and town centres.

"Nonetheless, people do their shopping in supermarkets, and they are very convenient. The simple fact is that shopping is changing and people like to do it in supermarkets.

"If the population of Staplehurst and the surrounding area want a supermarket, then surely they should have one.

"What we must do is adjust to that situation and try to ensure there is still a place for local stores and town centre shops, to somehow develop a situation where both supermarkets and individual enterprises have a place in the community to provide goods and services which people need."

The planning applications for both stores will be considered for approval by councillors at Maidstone.

New book tells untold story behind campaigner's hard-fought battle to get justice for the Gurkhas

By Marijke Cox

editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

GURKHA campaigner Peter Carroll has revealed the compelling story behind one of the nation's most emotive and well-supported fights for justice.

In a new book, Gurkha, The True Story of a Campaign for Justice, Mr Carroll, who lives in Folkestone, describes the long-running battle to secure equal settlement rights for the brave Nepalese soldiers.

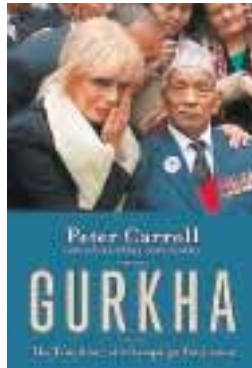

In 2009, his campaign proved victorious when the then-home secretary Jacqui Smith announced that all ex-Gurkhas who had served more than four years in the British Army had the right to settle in the UK.

Kent is home to the 2nd Battalion, The Royal Gurkha Rifles, based at Shorncliffe Barracks in Folkestone, and the Queen's Gurkha Engineers in Maidstone.

Mr Carroll, who fought the campaign alongside actress Joanna Lumley, said: "I think it's a fantastic story which touched so many people and I wanted to tell it before it got lost in the mists of time.

"This was one of the few examples in modern times where people power has overturned what a government has wanted to do. It put right a historical wrong.

"It gives hope to everyone that with enough pressure you can make things happen. Thousands of people in Kent supported the campaign and this will tell them the story, but also what went on behind the scenes.

VICTORY: Peter Carroll's book tells how campaigner Joanna Lumley almost stood in general election

"I think campaigns are a bit like icebergs – you can see the tip, but you don't see the massive amount that goes on underneath."

As well as recounting the tale of the great battle for justice, Mr Carroll reveals the backup plans that would have been put in place had they not been victorious.

One of these was for Ms Lumley – whose father served for 30 years with the 6th Gurkha Rifles – to stand in the 2010 general election against Gordon Brown in his own seat.

Mr Carroll said the Absolutely Fabulous star was "somewhat startled" when asked if she would stand as an independent candidate by the campaign group.

He said she expressed concern about what would happen if she actually won and stressed she was aware of the important job an MP had in representing their constituency.

But the 2009 victory meant this plan did not go ahead.

In a foreword to the book, Ms Lumley paid tribute to Mr Carroll and expressed the importance of the campaign.

"To my shame I, like many others, hadn't known that retired Gurkhas were treated differently from other veterans simply because Nepal has never been part of the Commonwealth," she said.

"Their legendary courage and prowess in warfare was well known, and countless stories of their lethal skills combined with terrific humour have been retold by generations of soldiers.

"No-one thought to question how they were treated when their soldiering days were done.

"When the campaign started my father was no longer alive, nor was my mother, but I am sure they, like the rest of the Armed Forces, and the whole country, and the whole world, would have been outraged by the injustice, the sheer unfairness of the fact that Gurkhas were not allowed to settle and work in the country they had defended so willingly for nearly 200 years.

"How didn't we know? Well, we didn't, and a great wrong had to be put right. Sleeves rolled up: what could I do to help?"

Mr Carroll will be signing copies of the book in Maidstone's Waterstones, accompanied by two Gurkhas, on February 25 at noon.

LANDMARK: The 1,000-acre Knole park and gardens has been owned by the National Trust since 1946

DESIGN

Students' conservation project unearths how Knole garden can grow

By Chris Murphy
editorial@archant.co.uk

FINAL year honours students have the chance to shine when they reveal their garden designs for the park at Knole, Sevenoaks.

The University of Greenwich garden design students have the chance to stage an exhibition of design, conservation and management ideas for the park and garden at the national landmark.

They undertook the work as a Historic Garden Conservation project on behalf of the Sackville-West family, who live in the house.

Marian Boswall, lecturer in garden design at Greenwich, said: "The aim of the students' proposals is to inspire all those involved with Knole to think about the conservation of the garden and park in a variety of creative ways.

"These are theoretical ideas for Lord Sackville and the National Trust to enjoy, employ, or ignore as they wish.

"Drawings and models by the garden design students will show individual conservation, management and design ideas. Group projects will explain and illustrate the history, geography and social life of the park and garden."

The exhibition features the students' conservation plans, and more excitingly actual scale models of their work.

They looked at planting and management within the garden and park, and at some areas owned by the National Trust and open to visitors, such as the Brewhouse Tearoom courtyard, Green Court, and even the car park.

Knole has been owned by the National Trust since 1946. Its 1,000-acre park is 90 per cent owned and managed by the Sackville-West family, and 10 per cent by the National Trust.

Knole was built by the Archbishops of Canterbury in the 15th century and annexed by Henry VIII and remodelled in the 17th century by the Sackville family.

They said it is one of the country's most important and most complete historic houses, containing collections of unique upholstered furniture, silver, paintings and tapestries.

Designs for the park and garden at Knole will be held at the 200-year-old orangery, which was opened to the public in 2010.

It's on the south side of the house, looking on to Lord Sackville's private garden, and starts on March 3.

TRIBUTE

Stars to celebrate life of Kent's favourite entertainer Dave Lee

By Marijke Cox

marijke.cox@archant.co.uk

SHOWBIZ friends of popular funnyman Dave Lee are hosting a special show to celebrate their much-loved friend.

The comedian and panto star lost his battle with pancreatic cancer last month, aged 64.

More than 1,000 people turned out for his funeral at Canterbury Cathedral with heartfelt and funny eulogies from showbiz friends including entertainer Richard Digance and comedian Bobby Davro, alongside Dave's daughter Debbie Glew.

Producer and director of the Marlowe pantomimes Paul Hendy also paid tribute.

Now Hendy is organising a show, Dave Lee – A Celebration, to mark the life of the Canterbury comedian and is inviting some of Dave's entertainer friends to take to the stage where he most loved to be.

"The show will be a fitting tribute to Dave's wonderful career, reflecting the many different aspects of it – including music, stand-up comedy and, of course, panto," said Hendy. "Lots of his pals have said they'd love to take part. It will be a great evening that Dave would have been proud of."

The Marlowe has not yet confirmed who will be performing in the show, but Dave had a long list of friends in the industry, including Jim Davidson, Bradley Walsh, Joe Pasquale and Bobby Davro.

Many of them took part in Dave's annual celebrity golf day at Chart Hills Golf Club in Biddenden, raising money for Dave Lee's Happy Holidays charity, which sends sick and underprivileged children on trips of a lifetime.

All the money raised through the show will go to the charity.

Dave performed at The Marlowe more than 1,000 times over 16 years, with his trademark bench sketch played out at his funeral by young choir boys in a special tribute.

The shows were so popular fans would camp outside the Canterbury theatre the night before so as not to miss out on tickets. Dave would provide bacon butties and hot drinks.

Dave Lee – A Celebration is on Sunday, May 6, at 7pm. Tickets are £35 and go on sale from Friday, February 24.

The Box Office at The Marlowe Theatre will be open from 9am for customers wishing to book in person or call 01227 787787. There will be no on-line bookings.

Dave had three children, Darren, 44, Debbie, 42, and Justin, 40, and six grandchildren. He lost his wife Linda four years ago to cancer.

While best known for his comedy and panto, Dave started his career as a drummer and singer and had several records released. He went on to form his own comedy show band, acting as both lead singer and impressionist.

But it was a chance meeting with Eric Morecambe that changed his life forever.

Eric had watched Dave perform with his group and advised him to start a solo career as a comedian or actor, which Dave went on to do.

Star Watts lined up to play people's princess

By Chris Murphy
editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

KENT-BORN Hollywood star Naomi Watts has been chosen to play Princess Diana in a big-screen retelling of her turbulent final two years.

Princess Diana's death in a Paris underpass car smash shocked the world, but she had been making headlines for years, not least within her love life and her failed marriage to Prince Charles.

Now Watts will take on what could be her most challenging role ever in a film being made later this year.

But German director Oliver Hirschbiegel is determined the biopic will be a winner thanks to the warmth, humanity and empathy he says Watts will bring to the role.

Called Caught in Flight, it will be filmed in Britain by the director of Downfall, about Adolf Hitler's last days.

Shoreham-born Ms Watts,

ON SCREEN: Naomi Watts will portray people's princess, Diana

43, said: "It is such an honour to be able to play this iconic role – Princess Diana was loved across the world and I look forward to the challenge."

Following the death of her father, Pink Floyd sound engineer Peter Watts, in 1976, her Welsh mother, Myfanwy, took 14-year-old Naomi and brother Ben to Australia. Enrolling in acting lessons, she was a classmate of Nicole Kidman.

She has said: "I consider myself British and have very happy memories of the UK."

Watts has specialised in low budget arty films such as Mulholland Drive, but also block-busters including King Kong.

It is expected the film will tackle some of the conspiracy theories behind the death of Diana and her boyfriend Dodi Fayed, son of former Harrods owner Mohamed Al Fayed.

They were killed in an early morning single-car smash on August 31, 1997. An inquest was finally heard between October, 2007, and April, 2008, where a jury decided they were unlawfully killed by a combination of the driving of their chauffeur, Henri Paul, and the driving of following vehicles.

The inquest heard from 278 witnesses and was estimated to have cost £6.5 million.

Ecosse Films said it wants to chronicle the final years of Diana's life and "how finding true personal happiness for the first time allowed her to achieve her defining successes, evolving into a major international campaigner and humanitarian".

Dry homes feel warmer

Holland Damp Proofing dries out your home and is guaranteed to work

Damp is a creeping menace that affects thousands of homes across Kent.

It rots woodwork and carpets, peels wallpaper and causes fungus and mould growth on walls.

During the cold, wet months damp can wreak havoc in your home and on your health. Treating your property for damp now will help to keep you warm and dry at this time of year. You could also save money because dry walls are better insulators, and a damp free home will feel more comfortable.

It is important to tackle damp because ignoring it can store up serious problems and also pose potential health risks – especially if you have a medical condition such as asthma or rheumatism.

For years, people have tried to solve damp problems. Traditional methods included injecting chemical solutions but unfortunately this can involve contractors coming into your home, drilling into brickwork, and hacking off and replacing plaster.

The work can be messy, intrusive and your home will need redecorating once it has been done.

And despite all this upheaval, there is no guarantee that it will work in the long term. Chemical barriers tend to break down over time, and once this happens – that damp will be back.

The Holland Damp Proofing System is a breath of fresh air that can permanently rid your home of the scourge of damp.

The idea is simple: draw out the moisture and the damp will disappear! The System involves a series of damp-regulating bricks which neatly fit into specially prepared niches in the external walls of your home, close to the ground.

These cleverly allow air to flow into the brick chambers and out again – circulating airflow through the inside of the wall which evaporates the moisture, drying out the wall and allowing it to breathe.

Holland's no-chemicals system is mess-free and as the work is completed from the outside there is no need to replaster.

No chemicals, no mess and no replastering – your property dries out... and stays dry for good. It can be used on most types of wall (including stone) and can be used on all types of property at ground level.

The company prides itself on its high standards of customer service. Holland Damp Proofing's staff handle all aspects of the business and they don't use commission-based sales people.

With thousands of satisfied customers, Holland Damp Proofing is the leading non-chemical damp proofing company in the UK, and it doesn't trade under any other name.

HEALTH

Lost for words – NHS runs up £500,000 bill for translation

By Marijke Cox

marijke.cox@archant.co.uk

HEALTH chiefs in Kent spent more than £500,000 on translation services in the last three years, according to a report.

While the study by independent think-tank 2020 Health took into account the crucial need for interpreters in hospitals, it criticised the NHS for the lack of a centralised database of translated documents, such as health information leaflets.

Instead, it claimed, NHS Trusts were translating their own material, replicating work carried out across the country.

Chief executive of 2020 Health Julia Manning said more than £20 million was spent nationally last year on translation within the NHS.

She said: "The costs involved are staggering. Urgent action must be taken to stem the flow of translation costs."

The biggest spender in Kent

COMMUNICATION: Patients need to understand their doctor was East Kent Hospitals University NHS Foundation Trust, spending £122,404 last year, rising from £78,458 in 2009-10 and £35,415 in 2008-09. Medway NHS Foundation Trust spent £68,094 last year, then £24,742 and £24,384. Dartford and Gravesham NHS Trust spent £34,600 this year, £54,000 and £51,000 previously. Other Kent trusts saw significantly lower spending or did not respond to 2020 Health's Freedom of Information request.

A spokeswoman for Medway

NHS Foundation Trust said: "Not only do patients need to understand details about their care, they also need to have the opportunity to ask questions and to receive a response."

"We are unable to rely on patients bringing an English speaking companion to hospital, so we hold a list of staff who speak foreign languages to be called upon to assist doctors."

Watchdog 2020 Health said creating a central storeroom of translated information would remove the need for trusts to translate their own materials.

A spokeswoman from the Taxpayers' Alliance said there would always be a need for interpretation, particularly for people visiting the UK who needed emergency treatment.

But she said taxpayers would be shocked at the amount spent: "They expect their money to be going towards treatment for sick people, not on language services."

At times like this,
we have local agents

TOURISM

Leisure show offers you the chance to visit

By Nick Ames

nick.ames@archant.co.uk

A COMPANY offering the chance to visit the historic Somme area of France – the setting for the climax to Steven Spielberg's epic film War Horse – will be one of the main features of this year's highly anticipated Travel and Leisure Show.

The Archant KOS Media event takes place at the Dover Cruise Terminal on the weekend of March 10-11 and will feature tour promoters, cruise operators, hotels, holiday companies, travel agents and visitor attractions.

This year's show will see a special French Zone, which will highlight the country's unique culture and history, its attractions, and world class food and drink.

And among this year's exhibitors will be the Somme Battlefields Partnership, which stages visits to the scene of one of the most bloody battles ever fought.

Nowadays the area is an attractive mix of woodland, farms and small villages, but the Battle of the Somme, from July to November 1916, symbolised the horrors of war in the trenches.

By the end of the battle, the British Army had suffered 420,000 casualties including nearly 60,000 on the first day alone. The French lost 200,000 men and the Germans nearly 500,000.

For months the French had been taking severe losses at Verdun, east of Paris, so Allied High Command decided to attack the Germans to the north of Verdun, therefore requiring them to move some of their men away, relieving the French.

However the battle turned into a bloodbath with no breakthrough – and the British cavalry redundant in the rear.

British casualties on the first day were 20,000 dead and more than 35,000 wounded – more than any army in any war on a single day.

The soldiers at the Somme were not conscripts – they were volunteers, who had flocked to join up in response to Secretary of State for War Lord Herbert Kitchener's 'Your country needs you' poster.

Men from the same town served together in the same regiment and were killed together. Friends and brothers died side by side, some villages lost all their young men in the same battle.

By August, questions were beginning to be asked as Prime Minister Lloyd George lost confidence in his commander Field Marshall Sir Douglas Haig.

At the front, morale also began to fall. Soldiers were shot for 'cowardice', as troops reached the limit of their endurance.

Lloyd George called the battle: "The most gigantic, tenacious, grim, futile and bloody fight ever waged in the history of war."

The sequences in War Horse show the animal trapped in No Man's Land between the opposing armies – but freed by a British and German soldier working together.

As the horse – named Joey – arrives back at the British lines and is reunited with Devon farmboy turned soldier Albert Narracott (Jeremy Irvine) it is regarded as a scene of epic war film

symbol of hope amidst the carnage. Spielberg actually filmed the Somme sequences in pouring rain on a disused airfield in Surrey, but the region expects a summer influx of tourists to see the true sights of the battlefield.

A spokesman from The Historical, Museum of the Great War, in Peronné, said: "Although the area is beautiful and peaceful now, the scale of the Battle of the Somme can be seen in the traces that it has left – trenches, craters, shattered vegetation and villages wiped out.

"You can discover the history of this battle by visiting the memorials, battlefield sites and cemeteries in the Somme region, many of which are included on a dedicated route, The Circuit of Remembrance, linking Albert and Peronné."

Other French exhibitors will include the holiday coastal town of Berck, historic St Omer and Arras, the busy port of Dunkerque, which has great significance from World War Two, while the Flavours of France section will highlight the produce of the area – including its award winning wines, cheeses, fruit and ciders.

Cancer sufferer defies odds to fulfil dream of writing book

By Chris Murphy

editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

SHE was given six months to live after breast cancer spread to her brain and liver, but a year later Pat MacVicar is still battling and has even found time to fulfil her lifetime dream of having a children's book published.

The inspirational 53-year-old from Underriver, near Sevenoaks, said she was determined to see her ambition through, and now Newvolution is on the bookshelves and available from Amazon.

And it started with the mother-of-three's bizarre dream of rabbits with horns in her garden.

At the time, she was undergoing radiation therapy for stage three breast cancer and the book gave her the perfect focus for her train journeys to London.

Pat said: "Time is so precious especially when you may have little of it, and I didn't want to waste any."

It took two years to finally see it in print, and during that time she was given the devastating news that she only had half a year to live. Experimental drugs are currently keeping her alive as she continues to defy the odds against her.

She has regular intravenous chemotherapy.

The book tells the story of a young girl who discovers everyday animals have evolved into special creatures. Pat used the personalities of her children, Christine, 19, Helen who is 18 and 14-year-old son Angus as inspiration for her main character, Lucy.

Helen, who is off to Oxford University, joined her mum's project by creating the illustrations.

A physiotherapist for 20 years, Pat said: "It is hard knowing you are living on borrowed time, but it makes you realise that you have to make the most of the time you have."

"It is great to know I have achieved something I never thought I could do, and which my children can look at and be proud of."

She was among the first to go on a new synthetic drug called Eribulin which mirrors marine sponges.

Pat said: "You never know with this disease, they were certainly not optimistic. This has given my a little more time. But the idea is to squeeze as much as you can out of this existence."

The dedicated mum has been helped enormously by Macmillan Cancer Support, and £1 from each sale of the book goes to the charity.

For more information on Macmillan Cancer Support phone 0300 1000 200 or email fund-raising@macmillan.org.uk.

EDUCATION

College to come under the wing of Dragon Peter Jones

By Ed Hill

ed.hill@archant.co.uk

THANET College is the first in Kent to become a Peter Jones Enterprise Academy.

The scheme, set up by the BBC's Dragons' Den businessman, offers a specialised course in enterprise and entrepreneurship.

It gives students the opportunity to start their own micro business, while gaining the specialised knowledge to succeed in the business world.

Students also get four weeks' work experience in a company and attend master classes with a range of top entrepreneurs.

The college says applicants do not necessarily have to be traditional business students, but can have a background in creative arts, construction, or just have an enterprise idea they would like to pursue while studying in a business format.

Businesses and finance is one of Thanet College's specialisms.

The new courses run from BTEC Level 1 through Level 2

ENTREPRENEUR: Peter Jones

and Level 3 (equivalent to A Levels) to the first year of higher education (a Higher National Certificate) from which students can progress on to a full degree.

Sara Reeves, who leads business and enterprise courses at the college, said: "Students on these courses will learn by operating their own business."

"They need to come to us with a pitch that they can work on. This is a new way of learning where students live their business idea rather than studying theory.

"Even the environment will be different – with discussion and planning in the boardroom rather than the classroom."

There are currently 25 colleges in the UK that are part of the Peter Jones Academy.

The course's approach is to focus on learning by doing, and supporting and encouraging students to realise their own business ambitions.

Jones, who is a keen sportsman, started in business by setting up his own tennis coaching company when he was 16.

After his next venture in computers failed, he built a multi-million pound company in the mobile phone market.

His business empire includes a TV production company along with sports and leisure businesses.

Students need to apply by April 5, 2012, for courses starting in September.

STRIKING: The Jasmin Vardimon Company has made its name by using unique dance and technology

ARTS

A step in right direction for town as renowned dance troupe moves in

By Ed Hill

ed.hill@archant.co.uk

AN internationally renowned dance group has moved to Ashford.

The Jasmin Vardimon Company has created a production space at the Stour Centre.

The company, formed by Jasmin Vardimon in 1997, has made its name staging theatrical dance performances incorporating modern technology and new choreography techniques to create a unique style.

The Israeli-born choreographer has been an associate artist at Sadler's Wells since 2006.

The company hopes its new creative home will be a hub for dance in the South East and will build links with the wider community.

The production space will house three strands of the company: a rehearsal and performance space; a professional development certificate for dancers; and a centre for artistic research.

Picture: TRISTRAM KENTON

The company's dancers are moving to the town to be closer for rehearsals. The group also hopes to attract other international artists to the space.

It hopes to premier its latest work at the Stour Centre in October after it finishes touring.

Ms Vardimon said: "There will be performances here both from us and other artists and there will be a lot of education work and activities that will be open to the community."

Clr Bernard Heyes, portfolio holder for culture and recreation, said: "Jasmin Vardimon is international, they are successful and they're going to help put Ashford on the map."

He said this was the first step towards a new cultural quarter being developed in Ashford, adding: "Jasmine Vardimon is going to have connections with the new K College and links with schools as part of its education programme. There is no end to the potential."

CHARITY

Near-death experience on Mt Kilimanjaro inspires climber to aid life-saving porters

By Ed Hill

ed.hill@archant.co.uk

A WOMAN who nearly died on the slopes of Mount Kilimanjaro has set up a charity to support the porters who helped save her life.

Geri Carden, from Sevenoaks, was climbing the mountain in Africa with a group of friends last year when she suffered a massive cerebral oedema, a severe and often fatal form of altitude sickness.

She said: "I collapsed close to the summit and was taken off the mountain very quickly by the porters. They saved my life.

"They are selfless. They got me down the mountain before my brain exploded.

"They literally drag people down as quickly as they can, often hurting themselves doing so, twisting ankles and breaking legs in the process. They put their lives at risk for so little."

After recovering the climber,

TOUGH: Geri Carden (right) was saved by Kilimanjaro porters after suffering severe altitude sickness along with some of her friends, decided to start the Kilimanjaro Care Foundation.

With a background in business the trustees decided the best way to help the local people in Tanzania was through basic advice and help about commerce. They earn very little money and live in terrible conditions that fall below the UN poverty line and there is little education.

"We travelled back and did a

CARDEN, ON LOCAL PORTERS

survey and needs analysis. We decided what we would like to do is set up some micro-business initiatives and teach people about saving money and lending, and how to generate some sort of profit from something they may make or own.

"We want to use local knowledge. We thought the best way is to give them know-how that can help them forever, so they can develop a different way of living and not have to climb a mountain to feed their family."

The foundation plans to make a seven to 10-year commitment to the area.

By then it hopes the local people's business skills will be established enough to be passed throughout the community.

The charity is planning to arrange a fundraising trek across Tanzania in October to help raise funds for its projects.

Those taking part can either cycle for 360 miles or trek for eight days from the base of Kilimanjaro to the Indian Ocean to help raise money.

Ms Carden said: "You'll need to be fit to do it but we hope to raise £1,000 each.

"We can have a great experience, but we shouldn't forget the people there when we walk away."

THE country's oldest brewer Shepherd Neame has been run by the Neame family for five generations – and now a local historian has discovered what happened to the Shepherds.

Following the discovery of two previously unknown ledgers, brewery archivist and former Lloyd's underwriter John Owen has written a new book: The Shepherds of Shepherd Neame 1737-1875.

"It tells the story of a class of people – who have largely disappeared from towns like Faversham – merchants and entrepreneurs," he said.

"There may not be the opportunities for people at present to follow what they achieved, but the evidence of their success is still in the town; you look at a large house from previous and times and think 'where did the money to build that come from?'"

Mr Owen used information from the ledgers and researched insurance policies and ecclesiastical records to reinstate the Shepherds in the historical record, marking their considerable achievements in the story of the brewery.

He said: "Fifteen years ago when the general history of the brewery was being compiled, I got access to the archives and did quite a lot of work on the old deeds."

"After I retired from the City I was asked to put the archives in order, and it was then I came across things which had not come to light before. The two ledgers provided a wonderful insight into what happened.

"Through the shortages of the Napoleonic Wars to the coming of the railways, each generation consolidated trade and seized opportunities for growth in staff, equipment and property, consistently outperforming rival brewers."

The book tells the story of how Samuel Shepherd, John Shepherd, Julius Shepherd, Henry Shepherd and Henry Shepherd Junior ran the business and made it prosper.

Originating from Peasmarsh, Sussex, in the 16th century, the Shepherd family acquired the brewery by marriage in 1732.

It was officially worth £1,000, but in two generations they had become one of the wealthiest merchant families in Faversham.

Within four generations, in 1875, they were joint partners in the brewery which had a value of £165,000.

The family had formed business partnerships with Charles Jones Hilton, John Henry Mares and Percy Beale Neame, but there is little evidence that Henry Shepherd planned for his family to continue as partners or that his children were interested in succeeding him.

In his will, written in 1868, there is no reference to the brewery and on July 30, 1877, Ellen Shepherd sold the half interest of her late husband to Percy Beale Neame.

The Shepherd family ceased to have any interest in the brewery and no member of the Shepherd family ever again lived in Faversham.

With the exception of the surname, retained in the company name, little evidence of the family and its activities survived.

Nearly all the business records of the early Shepherds disappeared; the ledgers, cash books, rest books, waste books, brewing books and correspondence. All the early deeds of the brewery site were lost during the Napoleonic Wars, when a mortgagee buried them for safe keeping and later discovered they had rotted away.

But now the family contribution to a business which is synonymous with Faversham – and Kent – has been recognised in print.

Benefits reform will only work using reason and compassion

As debate rages over the proposed changes to our welfare system the Bishop of Tonbridge, the Right Reverend Dr Brian Castle, says rule changes must be made on the basis of justice rather than fairness...

THERE is a saying in Africa that when the elephants fight it's the grass that gets trampled.

This is precisely what is happening in the debate about benefits which is being argued with slogans and prejudice rather than reason and compassion.

Those many people who are genuine recipients in the spirit that William Beveridge originally introduced the welfare system are being demonised alongside, and because of, those who, we are told, are gaining unreasonable amounts of funding from the system.

But the language in which the debate is couched as well as the need to take account of those trapped in wealth also have to be borne in mind.

People can be trapped in poverty and dependency for a variety of reasons and they need help to be released from this trap.

Some, through circumstances beyond their control, maybe brought about by harsh personal circumstances or the fierce economic climate, will need the safety net of the welfare system.

On the other hand many may have no desire to take opportunities to be released, in which case the public purse cannot be expected to sustain them unless there are compelling reasons for doing so.

As the row over large pay differentials and inflated bonuses shows, people can also be trapped in wealth.

The Bible is more critical of the rich than of the poor – this is not from the perspective of envy, but out of concern for their ultimate well-being and from the damage that their wealth can inflict on their neighbours and society as a whole.

One of the reasons we are facing the present financial crisis is not because of the poor, but because of the rich.

A way of helping both rich and poor from their traps is for society to affirm people and their potential above wealth and acquisitiveness.

The Bible is more critical of the rich than of the poor

The argument of 'fairness' is common today. Many would argue for a reform of the benefits system on the basis of fairness; this would be a mistake.

It should, instead, be reformed on the basis of justice.

Fairness is a judgement about right and wrong when everybody starts from a level playing field: justice has morality at its heart and acknowledges the inequalities in society.

There are strong arguments for an overhaul of the benefits system just as there are strong arguments for an overhaul of differentials and bonuses, but let them be undertaken on the basis of justice rather than fairness.

Save water, and start doing your rain dance

AS A country renowned for its often miserable weather, it's surprising to learn that we have in fact missed out on the dreaded rain for two winters.

With the exception of the odd downpour, Kent in particular has seen so little there is now threat of a drought.

We seem to have been so concerned about potential snowfall, we forgot about the rain. Living in the UK, it's so easy to take for granted easy access to water – you turn on a tap and it's there.

Our idea of drought may be different to other countries, but if we want to avoid compulsory restrictions on the amount of water we use as well as staggering prices, we need to start being careful – and start doing a rain dance while we're at it.

Fight to save our woodlands

I REALLY enjoy walking in Blean woods. I love it because it makes me feel healthy and refreshed being amongst the trees and wild flowers.

It is good for me, others, nature and the environment. It has been almost a year since the secretary of state bowed to public pressure and put on hold proposals to sell England's Forestry Estate.

An independent panel was set up to look at the future of all forests in England and, along with the ramblers, I'm worried that people think the battle has been won and our woodland walks are safe for future generations.

The panel is busy gathering information for its final report in the spring. I welcome its initial recommendation that forests currently owned by the Forestry Commission should remain publicly owned, with a high level of public access.

However, Forestry Commission land only accounts for 18 per cent of English woodlands and I think this is a golden opportunity for the panel to look at the other 82 per cent and truly put public access at the heart of forestry policy in England.

I would be very grateful if you could publish this letter so that your readers can see that we still need to fight for a future of woodland walking.

All Boris' talk is plane stupid

RECENT action by members of the Government meeting with organisations supporting the plans for a four-runway airport on the Hoo Peninsula, shows London Mayor Boris Johnson is starting to panic about his chances of being re-elected in May.

The voters in the west of London, even places miles from Heathrow, are worried about noise and disturbance and they are prepared to protest by refusing to vote. They are calling the tune to Mayor Johnson, but the Tory establishment is getting behind him.

We know how bad the M25, from M3 to the M40 passing Heathrow can be, and since the designs for the new airport are twice the size of Heathrow our roads will be permanently blocked.

A four-runway airport cannot have all incoming and outgoing planes using just one approach route.

All of Kent and Medway will suffer noise and disturbance just like the whole of west London does today.

A smaller version of this scheme was rejected from the 2002 SERAS report into air travel by the then-Labour government. It found that Hoo Peninsula was not a viable location for London's airport, yet the report seems to have been ignored.

Maybe Mayor Johnson can find wealthy bankers to fund it so then anything is possible, but this government's review should come to the same conclusions as the last one.

I am pleased to see our MPs in Medway have written to the Government, but I doubt that will be enough.

They seem to be treating this issue with kid gloves; perhaps they are careful not to do anything to discredit Boris this close to an election.

We will have to do what we did last time – protest, hold public meetings and make a complete nuisance of ourselves just as Plane Stupid did just before the last election, to ensure Medway is taken as seriously as west London.

Cold snaps to be expected

ONCE again Phil Grainger

(Letters, last week) fails to understand that man-made climate change is the cause of the colder than usual weather across Europe and the UK.

As far back as 2001, Nasa scientists in the USA were predicting that this could happen once Arctic winter sea ice cover started to reduce.

In the last few years this has been shown to be happening and so we are beginning to get the cold snaps which match the computer models.

Indeed, the US National Snow and Ice Data Centre in early February, 2012, reported that winter sea ice remains lower than usual and may be contributing to the formation of huge high pressure systems over Northern Siberia which are sending cold air across us.

Since such scientific reports and analysis have been reported across the media recently I'm surprised Mr Grainger remains unaware. Presumably he's also unaware of reports at the end of last year that show large methane plumes – a gas 20 times as potent for global warming than CO2 – in the Arctic ocean off Eastern Siberia, and which are of growing concern to climatologists because such may well help speed up climate change overall.

It is true though that our (mostly Western until recently) overuse and over reliance on fossil fuels, has been a major cause of this and that increasing population and industrialisation may exacerbate things.

However, this can be addressed by a substantial change to our social and economic systems towards far more equitable ones along with green and renewable energy production.

Recently many of the world's top financial institutions have called for a change away from austerity policies, that are threatening social cohesion, towards green and other infrastructure initiatives as a way of dealing with deficits.

Much more than this would be required though, but in my view it is at present only the world's Green parties and some others who stand ready to implement such action.

Put railway in public's hands

THE recent controversy over bonus payments for senior managers at Network Rail shows that the situation could have been dealt with earlier, and the decision to forgo the bonuses will not mean the issue will go away.

The Co-op Party has been campaigning over the past few years for Network Rail to be turned into a mutual and some of your readers will no doubt recall being offered leaflets outside stations that resembled train tickets.

We believe that Network Rail should be owned and controlled by the public – a situation if it got the go ahead that would mean that pay and reward would be decided by public agreement.

Please use our campaign site at <http://peoplesrail.org.uk/take-action/>.

Government urged to 'think small first' to aid recovery

Small to medium enterprises are the lifeblood of a thriving economy as they employ and trade locally. With commitment to an area or town, they are less likely to relocate, taking jobs and money elsewhere, than a large company. The Federation of Small Businesses across Kent and Medway has been active in promoting the interests of its members and so benefiting the county as a whole. This week Nick Ames take a look at the challenges – and the opportunities – it faces as well as featuring how MPs are backing business.

AS SMALL firms look to shed more staff, the Government must be bolder to help incentivise job-creation, says the county's branch of the Federation of Small Businesses (FSB).

New figures from the federation show that small businesses across the UK will look to shed staff in the first three months of 2012 as it warns that the Government needs to be bolder in its changes to existing employment law to incentivise employment.

A survey by the FSB – the 'Voice of Small Business' Index – showed that a balance of 4.8 per cent of small businesses reduced their headcount in the three months from October to December – slightly less than businesses had expected.

In Kent and Medway the FSB Small Business Barometer reported 25 per cent of business responding to the survey had reduced their staffing over a 12-month period. Only 19 per cent had increased their staffing levels.

With heavy cuts in the public sector and a rise in the number of people unemployed in Kent and Medway, more job losses by small businesses would make for an extremely difficult labour market.

With unemployment statistics increasing, the FSB is urging the Government to "think small first" when it responds to the Modern Workplaces consultation.

The FSB is specifically calling for:

- Micro firms to be made exempt from the extension of the right to request flexible working for all.
- A complete and simplified reform of maternity and paternity leave.
- A micro business exemption from proposals on pay audits which will require employers who lose an employment tribunal case to carry out a potentially costly, time-consuming and complex pay audit.

Small-business confidence fell at the end of 2011 as businesses were hit by high inflation, rising utility bills and reduced spending. So the FSB is calling on the Government to act on policies and initiatives already announced to help boost small-business confidence so that they can invest during the coming year.

Roger House, FSB chairman for Kent and Medway, said: "The beginning of 2012 is beginning to look bleak, with confidence incredibly low and businesses looking to shed staff.

"However, things do not need to be so negative. If the Government makes the right choices and puts action into words we can turn this around. The Government has a good chance to

MP shows his support

SITTINGBOURNE and Sheppey MP Gordon Henderson, who has stated his commitment to supporting local businesses, made a visit to Carousel Logistics – Swale Business of the Year 2011.

The Sittingbourne logistics company, which was established in 1984, designs, implements and distribution and warehousing for a range of companies.

Mr Henderson, second left, was given a tour of the head office and warehouse by brothers Graham (managing director) and Michael (business development director) Martin.

Michael said: "It was great to have the chance to talk directly with Mr Henderson and show him the contribution that businesses like Carousel are making to the local economy and community.

"I am delighted our local MP is taking the time to listen to and show his support for local businesses."

During the tour they discussed issues affecting businesses in Sittingbourne. Top of the agenda was the local road infrastructure and the much-speculated airport developments in the South East.

Mr Henderson said: "It is important to listen to the needs and concerns of the local business community in the current economic climate and I will continue to work closely with all businesses, whatever size or form, through my Sittingbourne and Sheppey Link 2 Business website."

make a real difference to the livelihoods of small firms when it reports on the Modern Workplaces consultation.

"Tinkering and increasing existing employment laws will only serve to worsen this situation. But by putting simple measures in place – such as excluding micro firms from the right to

Don't target the SMEs

THE Federation of Small Businesses has written to all local authorities in Kent and Medway calling on councils to undertake, as part of their 2012-13 budget, an impact assessment before imposing higher charges and licence fees on their small businesses.

Local authorities are currently adding the last touches to their budgets, which will be presented in the coming weeks.

These charges are certain to be targets for cash-generation, but the temptation to use local small and micro businesses as a source of income must be resisted, the federation argues.

At the very least, local authorities must introduce a rigorous impact-assessment regime to ensure options are considered and fully-informed decisions made by councillors, says the group.

Such assessments should consider the cumulative effect of charge increases, rather than viewing each one in isolation. This must reveal the effect such changes have had, or will have, on local businesses to quantify and justify that there will be an overall net gain to the local community.

Roger House, FSB chairman for Kent and Medway, said: "With the decisions made by local authorities when setting budgets having such a major impact on the local economy, especially in the current economic climate, the FSB has written to the leaders and chief executives of Kent's county, unitary and district councils to ensure that their budget will not undermine the sustainability of local small businesses.

"Whether it is the cost of car-parking in a town centre, a statutory licence or the charge made for submitting a planning application, there is an impact on the local economy from that charge and the FSB is keen to work with local councils to keep those costs as low as possible to support local firms."

request flexible working for all – will help free businesses from the shackle of red tape so they can grow, innovate and take on more staff."

TV celebrity returns to home town to open unique new nursing home

By Joe Bill

joe.bill@archant.co.uk

A RED carpet would not have looked out of place at the new Signature Mirimar care home in Herne Bay as a top TV presenter rolled up to open the business's new complex.

BBC1 star Nicki Chapman, who has recently been filming Escape To The Country, was on hand to cut the ribbon at the unique centre.

Set on the former Mirimar Hotel site, the new 77-room nursing home offers a special way of living for elderly people in need of care.

General manager Marlene Snodgrass said: "We have a very different model of care here, where people can rent an apartment.

"It is an inclusive rent that includes all of their food, utilities, council tax, laundry and house-keeping. If the individual then needs care on top, that is charged as an extra.

"It is a bit like pay as you go – you only pay for the care you use and need. It is bespoke care within an assisted-living complex."

Unlike many homes, elderly couples can also live together within the same apartment, and each person will have their care needs tailored to them.

The launch was to unveil phase two of the building, which includes 25 apartments, featuring a bedroom big enough for two people if needed, a kitchen-diner area, lounge and wet room. Each apartment has a small patio area or balcony, or it looks out on to the sea or a sensory garden.

Former Pop Idol judge Chapman jumped at the chance to open the new home and revealed her long history with the seaside town. "I have known the Mirimar for years, even when it was the old building," she said.

"I lived in Herne Bay until I was 19 and went to school at St Mary's in Whitstable before going to St Anselm's secondary school in Canterbury.

"My mother still lives in Herne Bay, as do my best friends and my godson, so I come down here every couple of weeks. Herne Bay is my second home. I have judged the beach-hut competition in the summer, I have my face on the mural along the sea wall, I have even judged talent competitions at the bandstand.

"I am very much involved with Herne Bay."

Former right-hand woman to pop mogul Simon Fuller, Chapman sees 'the Bay' as a great place to raise a family or retire.

She said: "I can imagine myself coming back to Herne Bay. It is a great area, it is by the sea and yet still close to London.

"I am really proud of the place. I have happy memories of living here and, yeah, I would retire to Herne Bay."

Chapman has also been filming lifestyle show Wanted Down Under for the BBC and using her musical knowledge in a new role on the radio.

She said: "I have been sitting in for Vanessa Feltz on BBC Radio 2, so I have been very varied recently. I have been handing over to Chris Evans and I am doing about a week a month for the next six months. It's great because I get to choose what I want to play. Nothing too cheesy, though."

The Lord Major of Canterbury Ken Thomas was also on hand to mark the opening of the new home, but it was Herne Bay champion Chapman who cut the three-foot cake.

She said: "I think what the team at the Mirimar offer is fantastic. It is supported independent living, a new way of doing it.

"It is a beautiful building. People want their own independence, but there is a real community here as well. If you need after-care or nursing but want your independence as well, then this place has it."

Here comes Danielle... and she just hates red tape

By Nick Ames

nick.ames@archant.co.uk

DANIELLE Stewart, Southern region partner at Baker Tilly, has been appointed by the Department for Business, Innovation and Skills as one of its two company law red tape challenge champions.

Baker Tilly International is the world's eighth-largest accountancy and business advisory network by combined fee income of its independent members.

It is represented by 150 independent firms in 120 countries, with an income of £1.95 billion. Its Kent operation is based in Tunbridge Wells.

As a champion, Stewart, pictured, will:

- Review the suggestions made to BIS for areas where existing company law regulations could be streamlined or reduced.
- Ask additional questions of respondents where clarification is required.
- Represent these views (together with some ideas drawn from her own experience and contacts) to ministers in a 'star chamber', with a view to achieving meaningful reductions in red tape.

"I am very excited by the opportunity to be an official red tape challenge champion because I have been deeply involved in the development of better, more appropriate regulation since the early 90s," said Stewart.

"As a practising chartered accountant, I have often seen smaller businesses, in particular, struggle with the weight and complexity of bureaucracy applicable to them.

"In the UK we have led the world in the development of differential accounting standards – we already have a 'think small first' approach to company law embodied in the 2006 Companies Act.

"Against this backdrop, the red tape challenge represents an opportunity to go the final mile towards ensuring that every aspect of regulation applicable to UK companies is necessary, appropriate and as efficient as it can be."

The red tape challenge gives the public an opportunity to comment on the regulations applying to each specific sector of business, as well as on the general regulations applying across all sectors, with a view to reducing and simplifying those regulations.

Company law is a particularly large and diverse aspect of the challenge, in relation to which BIS has a clear objective, which is to ensure that the UK has a company law framework that gives companies the flexibility to compete and grow effectively.

Car dealership takes carmaker's top award

A "RELENTLESS zeal" for customer service has earned Mercedes-Benz truck and van dealer Sparshatts of Kent the carmaker's most coveted award for members of its franchised network.

Sparshatts beat 20 other dealers nationwide to take the prestigious 2012 Mercedes-Benz Commercial Vehicle Dealer Of The Year title.

Sean Fitzpatrick, former captain of the New Zealand rugby union team, presented the trophy at a ceremony in Gaggenau, Germany, home of Mercedes-Benz's Unimog all-terrain truck.

Among those leading the applause as Sparshatts co-founder and chairman David Jones stepped up to collect the award were colleagues Andrew Sparshatt, Paul Rooney and Helen Jones, each of whom made the final three in, respectively, the categories for Dealer Principal Best Practice Practitioner, Used Vehicle Sales Manager and Dealer Marketeer.

Sparshatts was additionally nominated for the After Sales Dealer Of The Year prize.

It was Sparshatts' second Dealer Of The Year success, the company having won the same title in 1986, two years after it was introduced.

With headquarters in Sittingbourne and other dealerships in Ashford, Dartford and Tunbridge Wells, Sparshatts sells and supports the award-winning range of Mercedes-Benz commercial vehicles, as well as Fuso Canter light trucks.

One of the longest-serving members of the Mercedes-Benz UK dealer network, Sparshatts commenced trading with just nine employees in January 1975. Last year it sold 729 new and used trucks and vans and turned over £60.25 million.

FINANCE

Business banking now has a bit more App-eal

RBS and NatWest have announced that their RBS and NatWest Business Banking App for iPad, iPhone and iPad touch is now available on the Apple App Store.

Business customers are able to track and monitor multiple bank accounts, check balances, view transactions and make intra-account transfers. A 'near me' function provides addresses and opening hours of the nearest RBS or NatWest branch.

The introduction of the Business Banking App, which was developed in response to customer feedback and demand, increases the options available to business customers of how they interact with the bank. It also provides 24-hour access to their account information.

Security is one of the key drivers of the new app, and customers will have to be registered as online banking users and will have unique pass codes to access the accounts.

Ed Hodges, head of mobile, business and commercial banking, said: "Accessibility is a key feature we hear about in customer feedback.

"The traditional 9-5 working day is becoming more and more a rarity and this provides the customer with account information around the clock. The launch of the app is the latest development in providing our customers with a clear choice of how they manage their relationship with us."

The RBS & NatWest Business Banking App is available for free from the App Store on iPad, iPhone and iPod touch or at www.itunes.com/appstore.

REGENERATION

Retailers buoyed by high-street upgrade

SHOPS and restaurants are taking advantage of the improvements taking place on Maidstone high street as some have recently opened or are on the verge of opening their doors for business soon.

Malcolm Greer, cabinet member for economic development and transport, visited a sample of these shops to see what the future might hold and the opportunities available after the regeneration work is completed in April.

He said: "It's pleasing to see so many shops that have recently made their way to the high street, or those that are about to open soon.

"There's only 16 weeks left of the refurbishment project and we have delivered it, so far, on time and on budget.

"The quality of work is of a very high standard and now shops are seeing the results they are beginning to move their business into the high street.

"This was my aim when I launched the scheme back in 2009, and now three years on we are on our way to creating more jobs, giving business more opportunity and really helping the economic development of the town."

A programme of events is also planned once the works are complete, which will bring more footfall down the high street for the businesses to reap the rewards.

The high-street area of the town has come under pressure in recent times because of the two large shopping centres in close proximity, especially Fremlin Walk, which has attracted a number of flagship stores.

KNOW YOUR PLACE

EMPLOYMENT

Experience helps our young people find their place in the world of work

IT IS increasingly important in the current economic climate to get young people into the world of work.

Currently there are two major ways for school-leavers and students to get the experience they need to thrive in the wider world – work experience and apprenticeships.

The issue of remuneration aside, the major difference is that apprenticeships are aimed at those who have already decided on a career and want to learn it, while work experience aims to give a broad spectrum of what a particular line of work can offer.

The latter offers a realistic view of what the world of work involves and gives participants the chance to see if what they originally envisaged as a chosen career is really for them.

Equally importantly, it can give them the chance to find out something to which they aspired is not for them – so ensuring they have time to go down a different path.

Apprenticeships enable young people to work with those already doing the job and learn from them, as well as feel what it is like to be part of a team.

One aspect both have in common is demanding something from the young people themselves.

If they go into a work place expecting all they will do is make cups of tea, that is very likely all they will do.

A willingness to learn and to come up with original thoughts and ideas will make the experience so much more rewarding and worthwhile.

And it is not just young people who benefit from placements – businesses can use work-experience programmes as part of their own planning.

Companies have reported that their employees often benefit directly in terms of the skills they develop from managing and supporting young people on work experience.

Some employers have used work experience as a way of opening doors and encouraging young people from a range of different backgrounds to consider careers in their sector, for example attracting women into engineering. This is particularly important for organisations requiring a workforce that reflects and understands their client groups – and may be looking to diversify.

Particularly when it comes to winning public contracts, business engagement in communities is viewed favourably by potential clients.

Work experience can help achieve profile – and not just with those they hope to employ in the future.

Young people and their families are often also customers and their insights can be invaluable as a company seeks to position itself with its key market audiences. The best way of doing this has been to ensure the integrity of the work-experience placement. Gareth Perryman, 17, has just finished a work-experience internship at a leading financial institution.

“What I took away with me was a very clear idea of the competitiveness of the workplace as well as the demands made on employees,” he said.

“Dress, punctuality, team effort and individual innovations and thought are all so much higher on my radar than ever before.

“I was made to feel welcome – but really it was up to me what I took away from the placement and it has given me a proper feeling for the commercial world. I also have a very much clearer idea of the right subjects to study in further education.”

Business is very much aware of the importance of apprenticeships.

Barclays Retail and Business Banking is creating 1,000 apprenticeships and offering young people the opportunity to build careers in the financial-services industry through a major programme launching in April.

The new drive will provide crucial opportunities for young people who are currently struggling to find work.

Roles will be based across England and Wales, and Barclays will be recruiting based on aptitude and attitude rather than experience and qualifications, giving specific focus to those not currently in employment,

LEARNING: Apprenticeships and work experience help our young people education or training. Successful applicants will receive 12 months' training and support and progress to a permanent position.

During their training, apprentices will also work to achieve a competency qualification in Financial Services similar to an NVQ, a BTEC award in customer service and qualifications in numeracy and literacy.

There will be a number of roles on offer in the South East across Barclays UK Retail and Business Banking division providing services to customers in Barclays branches.

Antony Jenkins, chief executive of Barclays Retail and Business Banking, said: “Tackling youth unemployment is one of the biggest challenges facing the UK economy. As a large employer we want to create opportunities which raise young people's skills and aspirations, and help them to support future prosperity.

“We are really excited about this programme because it will give many young people their vital first job opportunity, which they can then go on to develop into rewarding long-term careers.”

Skills Minister John Hayes said: “I am delighted Barclays are investing in apprenticeships which will help them secure the high-quality skills they need to create economic growth and provide pathways to excellence for the brightest and best young people.

“Creating a highly-skilled workforce that can take on the best in the world means seeing apprenticeships as an access pathway to the professions.”

Training, courses and careers

Rallying call to Kent employers

BUSINESS leaders in Kent and Medway are being urged to hire more apprentices as part of the ongoing fight against youth unemployment.

Vic Grimes – director of the National Apprenticeship Service for London and the South East – delivered the rallying call at an employer engagement event at MidKent College's Medway campus.

It was organised by the Kent Association of Training Organisations (Kato).

Mr Grimes said: "We have a really good story to tell about apprentices in England.

"Last year there were more than 457,000 apprenticeship starts – a 63 per cent increase on the previous year – and for the first time in this country more young people are choosing to take that route instead of university.

"More than one million 16 to 24-year-olds in England are Neet (Not in Employment, Education or Training) so we need to continue creating opportunities for them.

"Young people get a bad press but the ones I've met through NAS are ambassadors for their age group. All they want is an opportunity to prove themselves, and that's where employers come in."

Principal Stephen Grix said: "When looking at the future employment prospects for their children, it won't be long before there's much more interest in apprentices generally from parents – but we're not there yet."

Law firm starts apprenticeships

INTERNATIONAL law firm Kennedys, which has offices in Maidstone, is launching its Kennedys Legal Apprenticeship Programme in partnership with Damar Training.

Apprentices will complete a legal-specific apprenticeship designed to act as a springboard into a successful career in the world of law.

Damar Training is to provide training and assessment for the apprenticeship programme which will offer A-level school-leavers the opportunity to join Kennedys as legal administrators.

The three-year apprenticeship programme is made up of two phases.

The first is an introductory one-year intermediate apprenticeship offering individuals the chance to familiarise themselves with the legal world, carrying out administration and office duties while building their legal knowledge.

That will be followed by a two-year advanced apprenticeship focused on immersing individuals into legal work, assisting on cases and developing expertise in their area of law.

Apprenticeship places are available in Maidstone from September, 2012.

Determination to find work pays off for Kevin

'NEVER give up on finding work, whatever age you are', is one man's inspirational message after finding employment thanks to Medway Council.

Kevin Tilley, 60, has become one of the first people to get a permanent job through the new Employment and Skills Centre on the Rochester Riverside development.

Mr Tilley, from Strood, took just three weeks to find a job as gatekeeper for Denne Construction at its Rochester Riverside site after being referred by Job Centre Plus to the Employ Medway Advice Centre in Chatham.

He had been unemployed for 16 months and became increasingly disheartened after sending 400 applications to employers with no reply, before Employ Medway intervened.

"I'm absolutely over the moon to be working – I was by no means ready to retire and love having that reason to get up in the morning and get a job done" he said.

Mr Tilley has turned his hands to many trades in the past, from a job as a community officer to working in the Royal Navy and running his own business selling swimming pools.

After losing his job through injury, he found that despite his experience, he was having little luck with applications before Employ Medway's help.

"When you're in your late '50s and '60s like me, you get disheartened, particularly when companies can get three young lads between say 18 and 24 to work for them instead.

"But I knew how capable I was and wasn't prepared to give up, no matter how many applications I had to hand out" he said.

Mr Tilley, whose role includes supervising site personnel and vehicles and handling public enquiries at the entrance to the regeneration development in Rochester, said Employ Medway's proactive approach can appeal to everyone.

"I'm so thankful to Employ Medway for all the work that was done to help find me a job. My advisors were always on the phone to me giving me regular support.

"It's a good service with great conditions and anything I needed they helped me with, so I'd really recommend it to anyone" he said.

Medway Council's portfolio holder for strategic development and economic growth, Cllr Jane Chitty, said: "Kevin never gave up hope and through his determination and our ability to assist him, has found his way back into work.

"It's incredibly rewarding to see Kevin back in the working environment and enjoying himself and I wish him every success for the future."

Graham Brown, Denne managing director, said: "As part of Denne's dedication to local employment and training, we will continue to work with Medway Council and the Hyde Group to provide excellent opportunities like this on the Rochester Riverside project."

BACK TO WORK: Cllr Jane Chitty and Kevin Tilley celebrate his new employment

School consortium builds on its reputation with construction course

A consortium of schools has been rewarded for its excellence in providing the Diploma in Construction and the Built Environment (C&BE).

The Gravesham Consortium, which includes Northfleet School for Boys, Northfleet School for Girls, Hextable School, Wilmington Grammar School for Boys, Meopham School, St John's Catholic School, and St George's CofE, has been delivering the C&BE Diploma at all levels since 2008 and was awarded the prize because of its impressive achievements and flexible approach to delivering the Diploma as well as successes on grades, student progression and overall support for students.

Project manager Pauline Blayney, who received the award on behalf of the consortium at CITB-ConstructionSkills' London office said: "We are delighted to have been recognised as an outstanding provider of the Diploma in Construction and the Built Environment.

"The award goes to prove that as well as the teaching of practical skills, employer engagement and work experience are vital elements in giving young people a well-rounded educational experience.

"We hope to continue developing young people who can breathe new life into the UK construction industry, helping it to stay innovative and competitive in challenging times."

Trainer project is lesson in business for pupils

PUPILS at The Abbey School in Faversham had to be quick off the mark when they were challenged to design trainers for the commercial market.

The Year 7 pupils were taking part in an Enterprise Day and industry experts were on hand to offer advice.

Kate Austen of specialist running shop PodPlus, was joined by Mark Leader of the Kent Soccer Company and Nike retailers Nick Pearce and Kelly Woodford, to give the pupils top tips.

There were 40 teams of five pupils, each tasked with creating the next generation trainer shoe, building in technical benefits, finding a unique selling point and considering retail price.

Marc Leader of Faversham-based Kent Soccer Company, a sports clothing specialist, said: "The thought and work the students obviously put into designing the trainers was remarkable and although a winner and runner up had to be picked, I believe that every member of the year should be congratulated."

The winning team 'Memtops' came up with their front runner, a bright pink fashion trainer

with a high technical specification, which impressed the judges.

Jessica Lee, Elouise James, Keyaana Slater, Georgina Saunders and Holly Cheeseman were delighted at their success.

Holly, 12, said: "The day gave us a real idea of how businesses work and I liked finding out more about Nike from the staff who visited us."

Kate Austen, a young entrepreneur who owns Podplus, based at Ashford's Julie Rose Stadium, said the event would help inspire business careers and added: "At Podplus we understand that every foot is different and it was fantastic to be able to share some industry-specific tips on how the way a trainer is made means it can suit different needs and activities."

Sixth formers take some risks and learn all about about insurance

SIXTH form students at Tonbridge Grammar School got involved in risky business with a learning session about careers in insurance.

The Chartered Insurance Institute (CII), the insurance sector's professional body, delivered its Discover Risk activity to the school to give the 16 to 18-year-olds more information on the range of global opportunities that exist in the sector.

The interactive session aimed to show students how vital it is for businesses and people to manage different levels of risk, and how a career in insurance helps meet this responsibility.

The event was supported by Christopher Digby, art and private client manager at Bromley-based Brownhill Insurance Group, who gave advice on the decisions associated with risk management.

Students took part in an interactive game, with each team participating in a scenario-based activity where different levels of risk were explored.

The types of problems facing the would-be risk managers included a singer losing her voice on tour, cameras being damaged on a movie set and piracy affecting a company's profits.

Jackie Gibbs, PE and PSHE team leader, says: "The Discover Risk game helped benefit our students by allowing them to explore the complex concepts of risk management through a fun and engaging platform."

Ferry company sets new standard for safety at sea

AT P&O Ferries the philosophy is not just to meet the letter of the law when it comes to safety legislation.

The company also strives to meet the spirit of safety requirements and to take a leading role in developing concepts that encourage the continual enhancement of safety at sea.

As a result, the business has been instrumental in the application of marine escape systems to passenger vessels, embracing the concept of maritime resource management training so enthusiastically that it became the first UK shipping company licensed to deliver this inspirational safety training regime.

And it recently became the first ferry company in the world to build ships to the International Maritime Organisation's new Safe Return To Port standards.

With a fleet of 21 ships and employing more than 2,000 seafarers, it has the scale, experience and expertise to deliver a broad range of training programmes to its own workforce, and to a broad spectrum of other companies in the maritime sector. But more than this, the staff have a passion to develop the safety ethos at all levels, from raw recruits to master mariners.

Its comprehensive range of courses covers safety and survival requirements for passenger and freight ships and is also suitable to meet the growing demand for training personnel engaged in the burgeoning renewable-energy marine sector.

Just some of the courses include:
■ Basic Safety Training courses: these are an initial requirement for a career at sea.
■ MCA-approved STCW training courses on offer are: ■ Personal Survival Techniques ■ Personal Safety & Social Responsibilities ■ Elementary First Aid /Medical First Aid Aboard Ship ■ Fire Prevention & Fire Fighting ■ Maritime Resource Management.

All three-day MRM courses are recognised by IMarEST and accredited by the Nautical Institute and Maritime Coastguard Agency. MRM is ideal for deck and engineering officers, together with maritime pilots and shore-based personnel.

The objective is to ensure that sound resource management practices underpin everyday actions to reduce operational errors.

Marine Evacuation System training offers essential theoretical and practical training for crews of ships fitted with this equipment, which can be adapted as required.

P&O Ferries has its own dedicated training centre and its trainers are some of the most highly-regarded professionals in the maritime sector.

■ To discuss training requirements, email Julia Hambrook, P&O Ferries safety training manager, at julia.hambrook@poferries.com, or phone 01304 863272.

FOSTERING

Tomorrow's adults are in need of help today

ISP is an independent, not-for-profit childcare organisation that has been supporting the work of local-authority social-services departments throughout the UK since 1987.

Its unique integrated approach enables the organisation to offer highly-supported fostering placements that benefit from immediate and local access to the multi-disciplinary teams attached to each of its centres.

ISP's not-for-profit status underpins a philosophy of providing a high-quality, value-for-money fostering resource to its local-authority colleagues. Any modest surplus is shared between reinvestment in resources and the ISP Children's Foundation, an independent charity providing financial support to looked-after children leaving care.

While there is always a shortage of people prepared to find a place in their homes for foster children, that shortage is particularly keen when it comes to placing children with problems. This, says ISP, is its primary role.

ISP will be there to help those children whose needs are so great they cannot be met by social services. They are aged from their earliest months to 18 years and have often suffered severe traumas such as abuse, neglect or bereavement, and experience emotional, behavioural and social difficulties as a result.

ISP says the first and most fundamental step towards leading a normal life for these young people is to provide them with a safe and nurturing home with a foster family.

The group is looking for very special people to provide foster care for these youngsters – either on a part-time, full-time or respite basis. But their hard work is recognised with generous allowances and ISP provides the training and support network they will need to do the job.

ISP places great emphasis on the support and expertise available from each of its centres and believes it is of crucial importance to foster carers and the children placed with them that their centre is as local as possible.

The centres form the basis of ISP's work and are well-equipped, comfortable environments that reflect the aspiration and ambition that ISP staff and carers hold for all children placed in one of their families. They provide locally-available specialist resources in terms of educational assessment, social work, therapy and family contact and also offer excellent training and meeting facilities.

ISP has nine centres across Kent, Sussex, Buckinghamshire, Milton Keynes and London.

Many of the foster carers it has recruited and trained in other areas have come from a social-care or educational background, but the first and most important quality it looks for is the capacity to see beyond difficult and often disruptive behaviour to the needy child within.

They are like all other children. They need support, guidance and understanding to help them become balanced, functioning adults.

■ To discuss this further, you can phone the Fostering Team on 0800 0857989.

EDUCATION

Give your child the best possible start

KING'S Rochester is a very special place.

It occupies a majestic and unique site between Rochester's ancient castle and cathedral overlooking the River Medway, but its imposing and ancient exterior belies a warmth rarely found in a school whose traditions are centuries old.

Founded in AD 604, King's has evolved into a leading 21st-century school for girls and boys aged three to 18, with excellent facilities at all levels. Boarders may join at 11.

Academic standards are outstanding. King's A-level pupils who collected their results last summer achieved an average point score per examination entry of 238.5, outstripping all local grammar schools and the national average of 216.2

The students who achieved these wonderful grades in July are now studying at top universities across the UK, including five at Oxford and Cambridge and others at sought-after Russell Group establishments such as Durham, Bristol, Liverpool, Imperial College, London and Leeds.

GCSE candidates did the school proud, too. Their achievements put them above all the Kent broad-ability, independent schools, with 92 per cent of pupils gaining five good GCSEs or more, including maths and English.

In the pre-preparatory and preparatory schools, Key Stage 1 and Key Stage 2 results were also outstanding – 90 per cent of King's Preparatory School's pupils achieved Level 4 in both English and maths in the tests set in May, compared with 74 per cent of pupils nationally. King's success is all the more laudable given the breadth of curriculum pursued at the school and its broad-ability intake.

King's Rochester is a school that prides itself on the ability of its staff to bring out the best in every child and to help them achieve to their maximum, not only academically but also in all other areas of school life.

Talents and strengths are celebrated and supported – wherever they lie – and successful children are happy children. King's is a happy school.

Pupils and staff are also proud to belong to the oldest Cathedral Choir School in the world and traditions sit easily alongside a curriculum for the 21st century.

The school's next open day will be on Saturday, March 3, from 9.30am to noon. There is no need to book, but should you have any questions you can contact the registrar, Lynne Davies, on 01634 888590, or email her at admissions@kings-rochester.co.uk.

Principal elect Jeremy Walker will be at the King's open day and is looking forward to meeting parents and prospective pupils. Mr Walker will take over from Dr Ian Walker when he retires in July after 26 years of distinguished service.

THE INTERVIEW

Gilbert O'Sullivan

Gilbert O'Sullivan's back on the road again... naturally

Joe Bill talks to Waterford's favourite son, who has just released his greatest-hits album to coincide with a musical career spanning 45 years

IN TERMS of musical impact on the world over the past 45 years, Gilbert O'Sullivan has been a phenomenon. With more than 20 albums, 16 of which bagged a place in the top 40, six No 1s and the effective commandeering of an American audience, O'Sullivan could be regarded one of the most successful artists in modern musical history.

The 65-year-old was born in Waterford, Ireland, before moving to England with his parents when he was 15.

O'Sullivan attended Swindon Art College in his late teens and it was there that he formed his first bands and encountered Rick Davies, who went on to create the band Supertramp.

After stints with The Doodles and The Prefects, the Irishman went solo and 45 years on is celebrating his career with the release of his greatest-hits album, A Singer And His Songs.

And, as with every O'Sullivan album release, a tour is never far behind.

"I sort of work in two-year cycles," he said. "I will be in the studio recording a new album, then I will promote it and then tour it."

"And then we start over again."

Despite having a huge catalogue of songs, O'Sullivan still finds it relatively easy as to what to pick for his live tours.

He said: "Well, in 45 years there have been a lot of songs, but the great thing is, with all that work behind you, you can pick, choose and change what you play."

"There are the old favourites and popular songs that will, of course, be put in that people want, but there are some album tracks you can pick and choose from which people may not have been expecting."

"In a two-hour show you can put in some classics and some album tracks that are often requested, as well as some new material, so it is a good mix."

The prolific songwriter burst on to the scene in the late 60s after changing his name from Raymond to Gilbert in a play on words from composers Gilbert and Sullivan.

In 1970 the Irishman bagged his first top-10 hit with Nothing Rhymed, which also gained a No 1 in Holland, along with his second single, Under The Blanket Go.

His first album, entitled Himself, was released the following year, but it was his 1972 hit Alone Again, Naturally that was to propel the singer to stardom.

The self-penned ballad reached No 3 in the UK but went on to smash the American chart, claiming the top spot for six weeks and selling more than two million copies.

After further successful stints at the top of the charts in Japan, Canada and New Zealand. Alone Again, Naturally earned O'Sullivan his first gold disc and a Grammy Award nomination for song of the year.

THEN AND NOW: Singer-songwriter O'Sullivan had his first top-10 hit in 1970 with Nothing Rhymed

Even now, 45 years on, the song is still much sought after, being used in an episode of The Simpsons and in films Stuck On You, Stuart Little 2 and The Virgin Suicides and in BBC drama Life On Mars.

O'Sullivan said: "Yeah, I have had songs featured in shows. But you have to be careful about what you say yes to. I don't want them to be just used in anything."

"One company for washing-machines came to me asking to use a track. They offered a lot of money, but I said no because I didn't want my song to be used on the advert, so you have to be wary."

O'Sullivan went on to write many more hits, collaborating with a number of other famous artists, but one particular duet with a very famous jazz singer has stayed with him as his favourite memory.

He said: "I absolutely loved working with Peggy Lee – she was unbelievable. That duet would have to be my favourite – she was my favourite to work with of all time."

O'Sullivan has family in Kent and regularly visits the county from his home in Jersey... when he is not touring, that is.

He said: "I still love touring – if you don't love it, then you shouldn't do it. I wouldn't ever want to just get a group back together for the money, say. It has to be for the love of doing it."

"When you're touring, you have to remember that each night you perform is the first time that some of these people have seen the show. So every performance has to be up there."

"For example, I have had one couple who have come to see me a number of times and have asked for different songs. Some of them I haven't played for years, so I actually have to go back with the band and relearn it all to keep it fresh."

Perhaps the best tribute to O'Sullivan's work comes from other artists who have not only cited him as an influence but covered his songs for themselves.

Elton John, Bobby Darin, The Feeling, Nina Simone, Har Mar Superstar, Andy Williams, The Pet Shop Boys, Shirley Bassey, Tom Jones and Morrissey are just some of the diverse names to have made their own versions of O'Sullivan numbers.

With an army of fans around the world that adores every album he produces, don't expect O'Sullivan to be alone again any time soon.

■ Gilbert O'Sullivan will be appearing at The Orchard Theatre, Dartford, on Tuesday, March 20. Tickets are available from the box office on 01322 220000 and online at www.orchardtheatre.co.uk.

An astonishing multitude of dining delights

THE picture-perfect public house is one of the staple ingredients of Kentish culture. There is usually a small dog running around, a warm fire in winter or a fresh breeze in summer, thirst-quenching ales, wines and local juices. But more than that, the country pub has become a place of fine dining and culinary expertise.

It is our meeting place, somewhere to relax as well as have fun, and it is a place to celebrate weddings or remember those who have left us. Pubs and restaurants are the centre of the television-soap universe and the scene of historical events.

It is a fact that Kent's eateries are now attracting top chefs with Michelin-star experience. In the last couple of years, renowned chefs have headed to the hostelrys of Kent to carve out new centres of foody excellence, often choosing the more rural locations to kick-start their culinary campaigns.

Our rolling hills, leafy villages and fields of produce provide the perfect place for these experts to pick and choose from the best local ingredients and bring them to our plates.

Take a stroll, build your appetite and take in the sights and smells Kent has to offer before you taste it, too.

There are so many of these eateries dotted about our delightful downland, mysterious marshes and beautiful beaches, it is almost impossible to know where to start.

So just in case you're new to the area or just looking for something a little different we offer here six of the best...

An underwhelming night for the ladies

A GIRLS' night out seemed the perfect opportunity to try eating somewhere different, so for once my friends and I ventured out of Maidstone town centre to the more rural setting of The Cock Inn at Boughton Monchelsea.

Our taxi-driver's decision to go on a rather circuitous route meant we arrived late for our booking, but the friendly staff at the pub were still very polite and ushered us to our table in the half-filled restaurant area.

Tastefully decorated with traditional beams and unusual pictures, there was a warm feel to the pub – probably thanks to the roaring fire, which was most welcome on a bitter Saturday night in February.

Ravenous, we dived into our appetisers of roasted garlic bulb in balsamic vinegar (£4.10) and olives (£3.30). The garlic was ordered more out of curiosity than anything else but devoured as swiftly as possible while we struggled to work out how to pluck the cloves from their paper shell with cocktail sticks.

Both dishes were much as expected but a little on the small side given their price tags.

Moving on, for starters we chose a traditional prawn cocktail (£5.45), grilled field mushroom with pâté and blue cheese (£6.95) and beetroot and grilled halloumi salad (£6).

The prawn cocktail was easily the best-looking dish, with a large portion of prawns. Sadly, however, their watery consistency gave away what I suspected was their frozen history and meant the dish failed to live up to the early promise.

My field mushroom was huge and very tasty, but again I felt it let itself down a little – the blue cheese was more than enough of a filling so that the pâté rather failed to hold its own, being barely noticeable in the overall dish.

Easily the best of our starters was the grilled halloumi, with the contrasting hot and cold elements keeping this simple dish interesting.

Our hunger slightly abated, we looked forward to better things from our main course.

The vegetarian with us was a little disappointed to have to retrace her steps halfway through the pub to find the board with her choices. This had led to the awkwardness of loitering near other diners and hurrying to make a decision, so ensuring she could barely remember her options or what her choice entailed upon returning to the table.

RESTAURANT REVIEW

At £11, she opted for what she believed to be a Brie-and-hazelnut Wellington, accompanied by chips. A good-sized meal, this was tasty and certainly well cooked but unexciting.

Our other two dishes were 10oz ribeye steak (£18) with peppercorn sauce (£2.50) and chips and hot smoked-salmon fillet with potatoes and vegetables (£13.95).

The steak disappointingly came out rare instead of medium rare, but as one of the best pieces of fish I've had for a long time the salmon was a surprising contrast to the rest of our generally underwhelming meal. It was lovely.

Stuffed but not satisfied, we decided to give it one last go with dessert. The two sorbets at £4.50 were as expected, but again we had disappointment, this time with the orange-and-vanilla cheesecake (£5.95). The topping was delicious, but the base was salty and spoiled the overall effect.

Washed down with a bottle of house white and a few soft drinks, and completed with a few coffees, our overall bill of £112.55 meant the meal was just short of £40 per head... which wouldn't have been too bad if our meals had been ever so slightly more remarkable.

Four stars for Dover Marina

A HOTEL in Dover has been awarded a four-star grading thanks to its sea-view restaurant and services to tourists.

The Best Western Dover Marina Hotel and Spa has just been assessed and awarded the fourth star by holiday-standards authority Quality in Tourism.

Contributing factors included The Waterfront Restaurant, which offers a modern à la carte menu and is open seven days a week for breakfast, lunch and dinner.

The restaurant is especially popular on Bombay night (Thursday) with its fine array of Indian food, as well as Sunday lunchtime and the impressive carvery.

Hotel chief Anoob Saban said: "This is an excellent achievement in earning a four-star grading within the first year of the hotel's operation and great credit must go to our staff in delivering the service to visitors as well as to the local people in Dover who are using the hotel for functions, weddings and meetings."

Tourists and local people have also welcomed the availability of Starbucks coffee in The Waterfront Café.

Since opening in March 2011, the hotel has gained a silver award from the Green Business Tourism Scheme, which reflects the policy of protecting the environment.

The Best Western Dover Marina Hotel and Spa is part of the Leaf Hotel Group, joining the other Leaf hotel in the district, the Ramada Dover, as a four-star hotel. For further details, phone 01304 203633.

A NEW gallery dedicated to contemporary art has opened in Palace Street, Canterbury. Following success with his art boutique in Castle Street, David Lilford has opened this second gallery, which offers more space for his pieces to be shown to best effect. Lilford opened his Castle Street gallery in July 2000, stocking works ranging from just a few hundred pounds up to £50,000 or more. The new gallery will have pieces from Kent artists like Billy Childish and Tracey Emin as well as pieces from the likes of Banksy and Damien Hirst. Lilford said: "People are welcome to drop in to see what's being displayed even if they are not in the market to buy. There aren't many places in the area where you can view some of the most famous artists in the UK."

Kent Life, Maidstone
Open 10am-6pm

www.kentlife.org.uk

HERITAGE farm attraction Kent Life is welcoming three mischievous alpacas this month, the first time the species has been on view at the park. The trio, all just 18 months old, have settled in well and already welcomed visitors during the February half-term. The woolly wonders were brought across from QuarterHouse Alpacas, a breeder on the Kent-Sussex border. Alpaca wool is a useful resource for clothing and Kent has seen an influx of the animals in the last 20 years. Since then, their ability to protect livestock from predators has earned them a greater role in modern farming.

East Kent historical author Sarah Gristwood will offer a fascinating look into the world of Tudor conspiracy and cover-ups at Dover Castle in an evening talk on this month. She said: "It's amazing how closely the period mirrored our own. The power of negative or 'black' PR, the actions of agents provocateur... the more you look into the conspiracies of that time, you can see how deep the manipulation was." Referring to her best-selling books, Gristwood will offer an intriguing insight into historical plots.

Homage to the Fab Four Beatlemania

The Marlowe, Canterbury
Sunday, March 25
01227 787787
www.marlowetheatre.com

THE year of 1962 was a significant one in the history of music. Ringo Starr joined The Beatles, Brian Epstein became their manager, and the band had their first recording session at Abbey Road Studios, prompting one of the greatest developments the world of popular music has ever seen. Exactly 50 years to the day after the Fab Four's radio debut, The Bootleg Beatles start their 20-date UK tour. The band's last tour saw the debut of Adam Hastings as John Lennon, replacing Neil Harrison, who had portrayed Lennon in the Bootlegs since their formation 32 years ago. His performance was met with acclaim by aficionados and fans alike. Having played in front of Sir

Paul McCartney, George Harrison, George Martin and the Queen, The Bootleg Beatles have set the standard for musical homage to the Fab Four, wowing crowds at more than 4,000 gigs around the world. The concerts will feature The Bootleg Beatles performing their renditions of the greatest songs from the entire Beatles catalogue. They will be accompanied by their orchestra, who help them faithfully re-create many of the hits The Beatles never performed live. It really will be a night never to forget.

Social media? The clue lies in the title, agent warns hopeful tenants

By Nick Ames

nick.ames@archant.co.uk

NEW technology is impacting on all businesses – and property is no exception.

Companies are continually exploiting new trends such as Facebook and Twitter as they become popular – and no one wants to be left behind.

But pitfalls are out there – and some analysts are urging caution.

Sarah Rushbrook, inset, managing director of Rushbrook & Rathbone, a leading property-management agency, believes that social media should be met with caution when it is transferred into the business world.

She said: "The clue is in the title – it is called social media for a reason.

"People are trying to give it a business aptitude and that's where the dangers can lie."

Rushbrook said a trawl through sites by a landlord looking for information on a tenant applicant could reveal misleading data.

She said: "The recent launch of a new application, in particular, where landlords can target potential tenants and check their lifestyle, background and relationships online I have found to be shocking.

"Although on a positive note it will allow agents and landlords to advertise properties for sale or rent to a large audience, it also opens up an opportunity for landlords to search through potential tenants' personal information and judge what they are going to be like from looking at their photos and interaction with friends.

"This is the bit that concerns me. Many people using the social-network site will play out their whole lives online and have personal information on there that they cannot get rid of.

"A young man might be in a steady relationship now but have photos uploaded by himself or others from a few years back of a lads' holiday, and he might be discarded as a tenant because of it."

Rushbrook said there was a definite need for care.

"Social-media sites offer potential access to a huge personal database of people. The ability to intrude into people's personal space through them allowing access, due to their interest in a property, seems incredibly intrusive," she said.

Driving

BEFORE I took the wheel of Vauxhall's smart new Zafira Tourer, I had to ask the burning question: what happens to the old Zafira?

It carries on – at least for now – was the simple answer. Though nearing the end of its second generation on the the market, the Zafira remains a midi-MPV top seller and still one of the best at seating seven within a relatively compact body.

So Vauxhall says the old car will continue for as long as people want it – within reason – and a streamlined range that the Tourer is sure to cannibalise for some of its sales.

The Tourer pulls the same seven-up seating trick, but with more luxury and impact, putting Ford's successful sporting seven-seat S-Max under considerable pressure.

Part of this comes from the undoubted style of the newcomer.

You can't often say that about an MPV, but the Zafira Tourer has it in spades. It uses the same styling cues that have made such an impact on Vauxhall's Astra family hatch and the bigger Insignia.

The other big pressure on the S-Max is money, with an entry price of £21,000 for the Tourer undercutting the S-Max by £1,200.

Ah, but can the Tourer outperform the S-Max in one of the most challenging areas for an MPV – driver entertainment?

There's no straight answer here; there's probably not much in it in real world motoring if you choose models with the sports suspension such as the lively SRi spec 165PS (163bhp) 2.0 CDTi diesel (£25,915) I tried.

With a superior cabin and greater versatility, this means that the new Vauxhall blows the Ford away.

Fitted with a start/stop system to cut fuel consumption and emissions, this version should also average more than 50mpg.

However, climb into versions with a standard suspension and there is a hint of the cornering wallow that plagues such high-riding cars – albeit a well controlled tendency and easily outweighed by the Tourer's high comfort levels.

I found this out on a more modest SE 1.4 Turbo petrol model (£24,005), while being astonished at the 140PS (138bhp) of pulling power available from this engine in such a largish vehicle.

Admittedly, the average mpg is about 10 lower than the diesel I mentioned, but it does show how turbocharged petrols may stem the tide of diesel sales.

Finally, a quick word about the Tourer's seating arrangements; the original Zafira was the first big-selling MPV to offer five rear seats that didn't have to be removed laboriously, but the middle row was a simple bench.

In the Tourer's case, all five rear seats are individual and the middle three can be moved fore and aft, tipped, folded and arranged to suit a multitude of variations.

Miraculous yet unsurprising Passat a chip off the old block

By Sam Davison
editorial@kosmedia.co.uk

IT IS nothing short of astonishing how far motoring technology has advanced under the pressure of global warming.

Admittedly, this burst of speed makes you wonder whether the carmakers could have got their finger out a bit sooner, but let's not kick them now they are actually doing a good job of driving down emissions and powering up fuel economy.

Take the VW Passat 140PS (138bhp) 2.0 TDI diesel I drove to France the other day. Despite VW's full monty BlueMotion eco package, making the big saloon average around 60mpg – that's supermini economy – and emit just 119g/km of CO₂ thereby incurring no road tax in year one and just 30 quid a year after that, the car will still surge to 62mph in under 10 seconds.

It highlights how the German marque has taken less than five years to turn its BlueMotion eco brand from a driving experience akin to joining a monastic order, to a perfectly palatable way to get around for most of us.

The Passat rides and handles well on its energy-saving tyres, the gearbox does not feel unduly bogged down by silly fuel saving ratios, and the car's aerodynamics make it cut the air as cleanly as possible. The eco-friendly package includes battery recharging via braking and stop/start systems.

So, with its Benefit in Kind and other tax gains, it's not hard to see VW maintaining a healthy 80 per cent of UK Passat sales to company car user choosers.

Just as well, as it's not hard to see what VW has neglected in the latest Passat – style.

When launched early last year, it was supposed to be a whole new generation car – the seventh Passat – but looks far too much like the previous 2005-2010 model, even if VW claims the new car's exterior is completely new apart from the roof.

A SAVING GRACE: VW has only taken five years for its BlueMotion eco brand to become one of the best engines around, a trick not lost on the new Passat, which uses the latest energy-saving technology on this new car

You really do have to look hard, though, to be convinced that it's anything more than a subtle facelift with a new grille and headlights.

True, there is evidence that the same impeccable sound deadening detail from the latest Golf has also been applied to all that new glass, and the car is a paragon of refinement, but the exterior is still underwhelming.

The same argument could also be applied to the interior, though the quality and arrangement is of high quality, with excellent space and comfort for all.

More importantly perhaps, fleet users love its functionality, durability and ability to cover huge distances without causing stress.

It also has a large boot, though VW reckons the estate car and its cavernous load area will continue to take a slightly larger share of sales – many Brits are turning to estate cars as an alternative to high and boxy MPVs.

Six-speed manual gearboxes come as standard and that fitted to our 2.0-litre diesel was neat and precise, but all models are also available with VW's excellent DSG twin-clutch auto 'box that can also be driven as a manual – and sips fuel like one.

The DSG will cost you a hefty £1,600 extra, but it's well worth it for mixed-use drivers, who regularly get stuck in traffic and need the ease of the auto option, while also knocking the selector into manual mode when they get a nice open stretch of road where they can swap gears quickly and smoothly via the floor shift or by steering wheel paddles.

On the motorway, of course, it's back to auto in the knowledge that there will be no fuel penalty, as there would be with a conventional automatic.

First GEAR MOTORING NEWS

New Panda is a spot-on deal

FIAT'S all-new Panda goes on sale at the end of the month, priced from just £8,900 and offered in three trim levels.

Even the flagship 1.3-litre diesel, complete with air con, Start&Stop and alloy wheels is attractive at £12,250.

The new car is said to be larger and more sophisticated than its predecessor but retains the same versatile five-door estate-style body of the old model.

Ad splash for reborn 300C

CHRYSLER is relaunching itself in the UK with a £10 million ad campaign spearheaded by TV commercials and the arrival of its second generation 300C (pictured).

The larger than life original 300C was the epitome of motoring Americana, but Chrysler is also keen to promote its new smaller models, the Ypsilon and Delta, based on designs from new parent Fiat.

Tax appeal for revised Exeo

SPANISH brand Seat has launched a revised version of its classy Exeo executive saloon and ST estate range.

Based on a previous Audi A4 design, the Exeo offers German premium qualities at a more affordable price and with some tweaks, notably to further lower emissions and boost economy to attract tax-conscious company car user choosers.

Prices start at £19,480.

e. The Advertiser will be liable for all costs incurred by Archant KOS Media Ltd in the recovery of debts not paid by the due date.
f. Payment may be made by cheque, credit transfer, direct debit, cash and any major credit card.
- Any discount which Archant KOS Media Ltd may have agreed with the Advertiser shall be forfeited in the event of failure by the Advertiser to complete the contract or to meet the above credit terms.

Dartford the sole survivors in FA Trophy

KENT'S hopes in the FA Trophy are dangling by a thread after Ebbsfleet United were knocked out on Tuesday night, leaving Dartford, who face a tricky third-round replay, as the county's sole survivors.

Dartford were held to a 2-2 draw with Ryman Premier League side Wealdstone at Princes Park on the same evening and had leading scorer Elliott Bradbrook forced off after just six minutes with a suspected hamstring injury.

The Darts went ahead on 28 minutes when Jacob Erskine forced an error and set up Ryan Harris for an easy finish, but on the stroke of half-time Richard Jolly headed in Chris O'Leary's cross to equalise.

Dartford regained the lead within six minutes of the restart, a 25-yarder from Danny Harris that was deflected in off Tom Hoban.

Wealdstone equalised 10 minutes from time, with O'Leary's header crashing in off the underside of the bar.

The replay takes place on Tuesday, with the winners travelling to either Cambridge United or Guiseley in the quarter-finals.

Ebbsfleet crashed out at York City, Matt Blair's 48th-minute goal condemning them to a 1-0 defeat, the only goal coming three minutes into the second period when Jason Walker's cross was deflected to Blair, who finished from close range.

York missed the chance to kill off the Fleet when Walker missed a late penalty.

Brands keeps recession at bay by focusing on lower-profile events

david.pritchard@archant.co.uk

A SUCCESSFUL move into club motorsport several years ago is paying off for Brands Hatch as it attempts to weather tough economic conditions.

In 2006 the circuit's owner, Motorsport Vision, established an arm that focused on organising race events. It has steadily increased its portfolio and now runs 20 entire championships – up from 17 last year.

Of the 34 Motorsport Vision Racing (MSVR) events scheduled for 2012, 12 will be held at Brands Hatch. While the competitions, which include the F3 Cup and Lotus Cup, attract more modest crowds than higher-profile events like the British Touring Car Championship (BTCC), they have become indispensable.

Jonathan Palmer, chief executive at MSV, explained how vital the more peripheral series have become to the entire sport.

"Club motorsport really is crucial to the circuit," he said. "With major international events, people have this perception that they must make circuits a lot of money. They don't – some of them lose money and the reason is because they are always owned by somebody. Formula One doesn't make Silverstone huge amounts of money because the fees are very high.

"There also aren't that many major international events, but it's this bulk of activity in the racing that goes on weekend-in weekend-out and the testing that goes with it that is absolutely crucial to the viability of the circuit.

"We created MSVR to make sure we had an involvement as a club in this motorsport to really invest in a very important part of our future. It's working very well and it's set to expand further."

Brands has kept the jewels in its crown for 2012, with the BTCC coming twice during the season and the British Superbike Championship

VARIED: The MSVR series covers a wide range of motorsport types, from small single-seater racing through to powerful GT cars

BRANDS 2012 HIGHLIGHTS

- Mar 31/Apr 1: British Touring Car Championship
- Apr 6-9: British Superbike Championship
- May 18-20: DTM (German Touring Cars)
- Jun 16-17: Mini Festival

- Jul 13-15: FIA Formula Two and International GT Open

(BSB) visiting three times. Significantly, both of the hugely popular series will hold their final rounds of the season at the West Kingsdown circuit.

In October the BSB finale at Brands produced a nailbiting finish and with the BTCC now switching back to the track for the climax it makes for bumper back-to-back race weekends in October.

Palmer said: "We've traditionally had the final round of British Touring Cars and it's back to its rightful place.

"The final is an important round and of course as championships we want them to go to the wire, whether it's British Touring Cars or British Superbikes, which was amazing last year.

"It's going to be a great crescendo to the year for Brands Hatch and we're going to get big crowds for the final rounds."

ATHLETICS

Bustling Bosworth off to a flier as he keeps focus on Olympics

A RECORD-BREAKING performance got Tom Bosworth's season off to a terrific start ahead of an attempt to qualify for the Olympics this summer.

The race-walker smashed the British under-23 indoor record for the 5,000 metres at the Indoor Championships of Ireland in Belfast last weekend.

The 22-year-old knocked almost a minute off his personal best and more than 30 seconds off the previous national record to finish in 19 minutes 50 seconds.

Bosworth, from Sevenoaks, set the overall national record over the same distance last summer and was delighted to claim another, even if he was initially unaware of what had been achieved.

He said: "It was the perfect race, really, and I haven't done any speed work. It proved the last six weeks of hard work have got me to a high level.

"I didn't know what the record was. I just texted my coach the result and it was only when he replied I found out I'd broken it, which was a nice surprise."

Bosworth is hoping the accolade is just a stepping stone ahead of the most critical year of his career. The main aim is Olympic qualification, which cannot happen unless just over two minutes can be trimmed off his personal best for 20 kilometres.

After an excellent winter training, which included a three-week camp in Spain, confidence is high ahead of the first outdoor race of the season, in Lugano, Switzerland, next month.

CYCLING

'I wish it was easier to get back more often' says Staff on return

OLYMPIC champion Jamie Staff returned to the county this week for a ride with two of his United States track squad.

The 38-year-old, who won gold in the team sprint at Beijing four years ago, retired almost two years ago and is now in charge of the US track team.

With the squad in London for the World Cup this weekend, a test event ahead of the Olympics, Staff jumped at greeted the chance to return home.

Joined by US riders Kevin Mansker and Madalyn Godby, plus several local riders, he led a ride around the country lanes near his home town of Ashford on Wednesday.

The peloton was welcomed at the Julie Rose Stadium by dozens of children on their own bikes.

Staff said: "It's just something different, really, to let these guys come and see where I grew up. They're just starting out in their careers and it's a bit of fun for the day.

"It's great to see so many young kids out on their bikes. I wish it was easier to get back here more often."

The US squad are starting from a relatively low level compared with the world-class team their coach was part of with Great Britain. They will be using this weekend's event as a learning experience ahead of attempting to qualify for the Olympics this summer.

The buzz ahead of the Games has crossed the Atlantic and Staff is impressed with the new facilities.

He said: "Everyone's excited about London and we know it's going to be a good Games because they're organised and the venues are built, so there's no major worries there.

"The velodrome is beautiful – it's not over the top and fits perfectly in with the environment. It's amazing."

Hess keeping cool despite Gills' slide down the table

By David Pritchard

david.pritchard@archant.co.uk

HARD work remains Andy Hessenthaler's solution to Gillingham's loss of form, and the Priestfield boss insists he is not feeling the pressure despite the side slipping down the table.

After missing out on the League Two play-offs on goal difference last May, a top-seven finish this season was viewed by everyone at the club as the least a talented squad should achieve.

While a lack of consistency has kept the side out of the automatic promotion places since August, the play-offs looked realistic.

But after beating leaders Crawley Town on Boxing Day, the season hit the buffers and defeat at struggling Dagenham & Redbridge began a run of five defeats in six games before this weekend's trip to Port Vale.

Not for the first time since the turn of the year Hessenthaler warned of a mid-table finish in the aftermath of Monday's 2-1 home defeat to Southend United.

The team were booed off by a section of the Gills support, but the manager claims he is not feeling the heat.

"No, not at all," he said. "I don't like losing football matches – I hate it and want to win every game. But it's not the end of the world – you've got to keep believing and working hard. Hopefully, we can go and get a win and really kick on. The longer it goes, the harder it gets."

Despite staying cool, Hessenthaler admitted football management was an unforgiving career.

He said: "You've got to be successful and if you're not, then unfortunately you've got to face the consequences. We all know as managers everyone demands success and demands it quite quickly. I feel for the fans because they want to win games, like we all do."

Picture: ADY KERRY

TOUGH AT THE TOP: Gillingham manager Andy Hessenthaler contemplates another defeat for Gills

The Gills boss spoke with chairman Paul Scally this week to discuss the chances of reinforcing the squad with loan players, with the focus on two players in particular.

Oliver Lee, son of former England and Newcastle United midfielder Rob Lee, has been on trial from West Ham for the past fortnight.

Gillingham are interested in the 20-year-old, who is surplus to requirements at West Ham, but there are question marks over whether adding another midfielder to the squad would be the wisest use of limited resources.

The other target is former Charlton Athletic defender Jonathan Fortune. The 31-year-old is a free agent and has been training with the club. He would add strength to an area of the pitch that has been a source of the recent defeats... if the club could afford his wages.

Hessenthaler said: "We need to freshen it up if we can. The chairman's been good, but I think perhaps we do need to freshen things up a little bit. Whether that's bringing people in or putting the young kids in, we need to make a decision on that."

"We're always looking at players and seeing if there's a possibility, especially at this stage. Now it might be the case we can do something until the end of the season with a few of them."

SAFE AND SOUND: Jack Delo will remain until end of next season

Stopper Delo agrees to extend stay with Folkestone Invicta

FOLKESTONE Invicta have agreed a new deal with keeper Jack Delo, tying him to the club until the end of next season.

Invicta manager Neil Cugley was delighted to agree the new deal, with Delo telling the Ryman League club's website: "It's just a shame it's not a five-year deal. Goalkeepers only get better with age and, still at only 26, Jack has plenty of very good years ahead of him."

Delo, one of the highest-rated keepers in the county, is a former Charlton trainee who went on to play for Herne Bay in the Kent League before signing for Ramsgate. He joined Invicta in 2008 and has been their undisputed number one ever since.

Cugley feels Delo can have a lengthy career.

"As long as they stay fit, keepers can keep going for a long time," he said.

"Just looks at the likes of Tottenham's Brad Friedel [who's 40]. And Jack's a good trainer as well as being a lovely bloke who really cares about this football club. It's good to get him on board."

Sittingbourne are hoping to extend their loan deal for Invicta's striker Richard Atkins, who scored in his only appearance for the Brickies before the cold snap.

Margate have signed former Gillingham striker Tom Murphy from Ryman Premier Division rivals Horsham.

Murphy made just one appearance for the Gills before joining Conference South side Lewes at the start of last season. He went on to have spells with Farnborough and Thurrock.

Kent League side Herne Bay face an FA Vase quarter-final away to either Gloucestershire side Shortwood United from the Hellenic League or Northern League side Washington, the latter involving a long slog to Northumberland, if they win Saturday's rearranged fifth-round tie with Larkhall Athletic.

Dover Academy players Lloyd Harrington and Tom Axford flew out to Spain this week with the England Schoolboys squad; they were due to take on Valencia and Alicante.

NON-LEAGUE FOOTBALL FOCUS WITH FRED ATKINS

Let the abused have a free hit

“WHEREVER the moral high ground is, it appears to have been invaded this week by members of the football elite desperate to make a stand for a variety of causes.

There is, of course, no suggestion that any of these people are hypocrites who are gleefully trying to slur other teams or individuals while pursuing their own agenda, and only a cynic would feel otherwise.

As Mr Mackie from South Park might say, racism is bad. So is homophobia, spitting, the Greek debt crisis and, above all, failing to shake someone's hand.

Admittedly what Luis Suarez did at Old Trafford was about as clever as walking into a Sheerness boozer and doing a routine from Glee, but he didn't get drunk and drive his car into a wall, he didn't roger his team-mate's former girlfriend and he didn't leap into the crowd to kung-fu-kick a fan, incidents for which better players have been forgiven.

It's just possible there's been an over-reaction to the Suarez non-handshake incident, but the wider issue of general abuse in the name of provocation is arguably a more serious problem.

Some anecdotal examples:

- 1) At a Kent derby three seasons ago a player reacted to the concession of a last-minute equaliser by going into the tunnel and launching a tirade of verbal abuse – at a tea lady.
- 2) At a Ryman League game a deaf player yelled to his team-mate for a pass. His unnaturally high voice led to a cry of "You're a mincer!" from a self-styled comedian in the home stand.
- 3) In a Kent Youth League game a player was sent off for reacting after his opponent informed him he had recently enjoyed a brief carnal relationship with his mother.
- 4) At another Kent derby a player told his opponent: "I hope your mum dies of cancer." With grim irony, it transpired the player-in-question's mother had died of cancer just months beforehand. He lashed out and was sent off.

In all four instances the abuse was not racist but it was unacceptable. And in all four cases the perpetrators escaped any kind of punishment.

The first was just sad. In the second the abuser wouldn't have abused a disabled person but had no qualms about being homophobic. In the third instance the abused player 'learned his lesson' and, depressingly, accepted it as part of the game. In the fourth case people can posture about not reacting, but the innocent victim here has been punished and the guilty man rewarded.

The solution? Adopt the policy pioneered by the Australian Rugby League only a few years ago. Where possible, punish only the transgressor and absolve any act of retaliation.

A player who ignores the Respect agenda might think twice about insulting someone if he knows his victim gets the first punch for free.
